Utilities Urged to File With SEC, Assured of All 'Rights.'

Promise Is Made To Carry Out Law

Government Takes Step to 'Hand-Pick' Case for Court Test.

By Robert C. Albright.

Faced with widespread hesitance of utility firms to register under the utilities holding company act, the Government replied yesterday with a warning and an olive branch, moving at the same time to "hand pick" the case that ultimately will determine legality of the "death-sentence" law.

The warning came in a promise "to proceed promptly with the administration and enforcement of the law." The olive branch was many twigged, with assurances that registering holding companies would not waive "any constitutional or legal rights."

"If there is a general failure to register under the act the commission will proceed promptly to bring civil suits against one or more important companies who may fail to register, to enforce compliance with the act and to seek decisions from the Supreme Court sustaining its validity," read a statement by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

This announcement followed a letter from Attorney General Homer Cummings to all United States attorneys, advising them to refrain from bringing or threatening to bring any criminal proceedings under the act.

The cautious strategy of the Government was revealed in the letter which stated:

"If any injunction proceeding is instituted against you you will thus be in a position to disclaim any present threat of any criminal proceeding under such act."

Only One Registrant.

Both the Attorney General's letter and the Securities and Exchange Commission statement pointed out the act makes interstate mail transactions by non-registered holding companies illegal after December 1.

However, hardly more than a week remaining, only one small company has registered, and the preponderance of the industry appeared in no mood to follow suit until they are certain of their legal status. They did not share the view that December 1 is a "deadline."

The commission stated yesterday that it "will not harass the industry with a multiplicity of (civil) suits" and at least in the immediate future "does not intend to make any recommendations to or requests upon the Department of Justice for the institution of proceedings to enforce criminal liabilities under the act."

On the other hand, the commission said it will "resist any effort that may be made to vex the Government with multiplicity of suits or to provoke litigation with a view of presenting the issue of constitutionality on the basis of an inadequate record or a record not fairly typical of the situations covered by the act."

Rules Revised.

This was generally interpreted to mean that the SEC will attempt to select its own test case and hasten it to the Supreme Court before such decisions as that handed down by Federal Judge William C. Coleman, of Baltimore, reach a high court show-down. Coleman's ruling in the American States Co. case, declaring the utilities act entirely invalid, has been appealed to the United States Circuit Court, and the Government will intervene as a "friend of the court."

The SEC meanwhile is making every effort to induce holding companies to register before December 1, insisting no impairment of legal rights is involved. Yesterday it re-

Clipper Off On Pacific Mail Flight

Eccles Reports No Speculation In Bank Credit

Indicating no necessity existed for any restrictive action at this time, Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, yesterday declared "there is no speculative use of bank credit in the present situation."

Eccles was speaking of the business situation in general and of the stock market situation in particular. He contended that the fact that security purchases are being financed out of cash without increased use of bank credit was "an element of safety and of strength" in that situation.

The point of the Eccles' statement, issued at the first press conference he has held since last August, was that the present economic situation is sound, despite the unprecedented level of excess reserves created by a heavy inflow of gold, and that while the Reserve System authorities were closely watching the situation, there was nothing to be done at this time. He discounted the probability of an inflationary boom in the stock market getting very far.

Thus the Reserve System chieftain confirmed the report to this effect in The Post yesterday. He explained he was inspired to make a statement on the subject because of a rather widespread anxiety over the possible effect of the excess reserves and because the opinion seemed to exist that the Reserve board should take some restrictive action, such as depleting the excess reserves in part by either increasing legal reserve requirements or disposing of some of the system's holdings of Government securities.

Reason Undisclosed.

It was not exactly clear, however, why Eccles should have issued a formal statement on this subject. Whether he has been under pressure within the system to take some action was not revealed. But he felt that a misunderstanding existed of both the situation and of his own views which he shoud clear up.

He recalled that at the American Bankers Association convention last week he undertook to emphasize that it was the duty of the Government to intervene in order to counteract as far as possible the twin evils of inflation and deflation."

"The word inflation," he continued, "is used by some people to mean any expansion of credit, or any rapid advance in prices. In order to make it clear what I have in mind when I speak of inflation as a phenomenon that needs to be controlled, I define inflation as a condition brought about when the means of payment in the hands of those who will spend them increases faster than goods can be produced. In other words, the volume and

Giant Plane Bearing 115,000 Letters Dips Under Bay Bridge Cables in Daring Salute as Thousands Gasp; Farley Is Present.

By the Associated Press.

Alameda, Calif., Nov. 22.—Air-mail service across the Pacific began tonight as the first of a fleet of giant sky liners thundered westward Manila bound.

The majestic China Clipper, loaded with nearly two tons of "first class" and official mail, gave thousands a parting thrill as it dipped under the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge cables in the take-off. The cables are only about 300 feet above the water.

Spectators gasped at what appeared to be a daring feat. Pan American Airways officials said the huge flying boat made the dip for the benefit of watching school children.

The silver-winged sky queen started a mile run on the bay at 3:47 p. m., Pacific standard time (6:47 p. m. Eastern standard time), dipped under the bridge cables and skimmed on through the Golden Gate.

Anchored near the Golden Gate for the occasion was a clipper ship of other days, the Star of New Zealand.

[The United Press reported the following message was received at 11 p. m. (Eastern standard time) from the Clipper: 595 miles out of San Francisco; altitude, 8,600 feet; sky, sea invisible; flying between two strata of clouds; weather colder, 47 degrees. "All well."—Editor's note.]

Postmaster General James A. Farley, who read a message from President Roosevelt, gave the take-off order after J. E. Trippe, president of Pan American Airways, reported the China Clipper was ready for service under the mail contract.

Trippe then relayed the order to Capt. Edwin C. Musick aboard the craft, and the Clipper, an American flag rippling from its cockpit, skimmed away.

Almost at the same time the sec-

Fleming Offers New Deal Help On Bank Act

Association Head Pledges Co-operation at Board of Trade Meeting.

The New Deal's highest spokesman for banking reached out a cordial hand last night to the president of the American Bankers Association, and with extreme warmth, the chief of private banking shook that hand.

To Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs Bank and the bankers' association, Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, paid a personal tribute before 1,000 members of the Washington Board of Trade, meeting in the Willard Hotel.

In return, Fleming pledged his heartiest co-operation with the Administration and promised to go into communities throughout the Nation, through regional conferences, to:

"Educate every banker in the country as to what he can do under the enlarged powers granted by the new banking act.

"Impress upon him the necessity for carrying out the objectives of this act and for making plain to the public just what can be done."

Above all, Fleming stressed the fact that the Nation's economic life depends upon its financial flow. He kept coming back to the theme that bankers must make the public realize the nature of their business, its limitations under necessary governmental regulation, and its desire to be of service.

These developments cropped out of a meeting marked by high personal tributes to Fleming, who,

Stream of Lava One Mile Wide Threatens Hilo

U. S. Volcanologist Ready to Blast to Divert River of Fire.

By the Associated Press.

Hilo, Hawaii, Nov. 22.—Five rivers of blazing lava surged down hte slopes of Mauna Loa today in one of Hawaii's most spectacular volcanic eruptions in years.

One sizzling stream a mile wide became for a time a potential menace to this city of 20,000. The tremendous activity later appeared to die down.

However, Dr. Thomas A. Jaggar, government volcanologist, made plans to divert the flow by blasting in case it headed toward Hilo.

Observers reported this flow apparently headed across an old lava-crusted plateau toward the windward side of the island, away from Hilo. They believed it would not get within 40 miles of the city because of the winding path it would have to take in that direction.

Great activity in Mokuaweoweo crater, at the peak of Mauna Loa, was reported by Lieut. Karl Truesdell, jr., who flew over the area.

Timepiece Stopped at 9:20 May Trap Slayer; 'Threat' Hunted.

Two Mount Rainier women saw the automobile that probably was carrying Corinna Loring, 27-year-old bride-to-be, to her rendezvous with death on November 4, it was learned last night.

They are Mrs. Harriet Whitehead, of 4104 Thirtieth street, and Mrs. Mae Miles, of 4105 Twenty-ninth street. On the night of the murder, they told reporters, they were walking to a home in Mount Rainier, meeting place for a saengerbund, or local German singing society.

It was between 9:05 and 9:15 p. m., the women said, when they noticed an automobile—a sedan type—coming down Twenty-ninth street from the direction of the Loring home. They thought the car probably was headed for the songfest.

But then it went up to Saddleback Ridge, the bleak "Lovers Lane" where five days later the battered and garroted body of Corinna was found.

"No; that couldn't be any of the boys," Mrs. Whitehead remarked to Mrs. Miles.

The women noticed that the car was a sedan, and Mrs. Whitehead looked at the license plate numbers. However, she is not able to remember them now, nor can she and Mrs. Miles remember any peculiarities about the car.

To Interview Women.

Lieut. Joseph H. Itzel, Baltimore detective in charge of the murder inquiry, said at Upper Marlboro last night he would talk to Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Miles. He has frequently wondered aloud that nobody saw an automobile near the ridge that night.

His schedule for this morning calls for another interview with Mrs. George Loring, mother of the murdered girl, who has been asked to go to Upper Marlboro.

The story about the supposed death car was one of two important developments yesterday, the other having to do with Corinna's shattered wrist watch.

Berkley Peters, a resident of Mount Rainier, who found the watch on Saddleback Ridge several hours before Corinna's body was discovered two weeks ago today, revealed last night that the watch then was stopped at 9:20.

This strengthened the belief that the automobile seen by Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Miles between 9:05 and 9:15 was carrying Corinna to the ridge.

Time Important.

But the time angle is important from another standpoint. If a suspect is unable to account for his movements in what has been called the "blank 40 minutes," the police are going to conclude that they are getting somewhere.

That 40-minute blank in the case begins at 8 o'clock on the night of November 4. At that time, or shortly thereafter, Mrs. Loring left for church services. Corinna was alone at an ironing board, preparing for the wedding two days later to Richard Tear, 29-year-old St. Elizabeths Hospital attendant.

Tear has explained that he called on Corinna at 8:40 only to find her gone. He waited, then wrote a note saying it was 9:15 and time for him to get to work. He arrived at St. Elizabeths Hospital in plenty of time to join the 10 o'clock shift.

Corinna's watch has been the cause of a good deal of misinformation.

At first it was announced that, when found, the watch was stopped at 9:05. Then it was learned that

U. S. Exerts Pressure To Stop War Exports; England Rebuffs Italy

'To Take Consequences,' She Answers Protest on Sanctions.

New Discussions Sharply Refused

France Defends League, Cites Violation of Its Covenant.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 22.—Standing firm in a reply today to Italy's protest against sanctions, Great Britain said she accepted the "consequences which must inevitably ensue" from applying provisions of the League Covenant.

London sharply refused to reopen for discussion questions raised in the Italian note, dispatched separately to all sanctionist nations.

Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, handed the reply to Italian Ambassador Dino Grandi, at the foreign office.

The note stated League organizations had evidence "constant anxiety" to "carry out their duties in a spirit of impartiality and concede the utmost possible weight to the legitimate interests of Italy."

"Questions Closed."

"His Majesty's government is so convinced of the accuracy of this estimate of the work already performed by the League of Nations in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian dispute that they feel no useful purpose would be served by reopening or recapitulating a discussion of questions raised in the Italian note."

Italy had asked each country, in effect, how far it intended to go in applying trade sanctions.

In diplomatic but unmistakably emphatic language, the British government defended the exercise of its free and sovereign judgment in adhering to the Covenant and remarked.

"No other attitude is open to them and they would naturally desire to see the Italian government place a similar construction on their own adhesion to the Covenant."

Eager for Settlement.

Britain reaffirmed anxiety to facilitate a settlement insofar as it lies within her power as a member of the League and at the earliest possible moment of the "regrettable conflict now in progress."

Oil developments in Washington were regarded here as highly important.

"Mussolini is afraid of the United States," said the Evening Star editorially.

It called the "warning" of Secretary Ickes to the oil industry further evidence of the United States "strong opposition to the present Italian aggression."

"Denounced by its critics in Europe for selfish aloofness," said the Star, "the United States has, in fact, frequently given evidence of its readiness to co-operate with League powers."

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Nov. 22.—France's desire to assure quick working of the League of Nations Covenant in her behalf if she is attacked in Europe, proved stronger than her friendship for Italy, Premier Laval disclosed tonight in replying to Premier Mussolini's protest against sanctions.

The premier, in a verbal note handed to Vittorio Cerruti, the Italian ambassador, on November 19 and published tonight recalled that Italy had been adjudged guilty at Geneva of resorting to war on Ethiopia and added:

"Whatever its sentiments and friendship toward Italy, it was not within the power of the French government to withhold from this declaration.

"To disregard the obligation of the pact would have been to compromise seriously future possibilities of applying provisions which constitute the essential element of collective security assured members of the League."

War and Foreign Ministers Debate Opposing Views on Province Rule.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Nov. [illegible] of war and her foreign minister debated opposing views on autonomy of five provinces in North China before the cabinet today while Tokyo diplomats insisted the separatist dispute was "a matter of Chinese politics."

The War Minister, Yoshiyuki Kawashima, urged acceptance of Japanese military views at a cabinet session which also heard the "report" of Foreign Minister Koki Hirota. Gen. Kawashima then obtained a half-hour audience with Premier Keisike Okada.

Political experts, who said the life of the present government might depend on the autonomy discussions, asserted the cabinet debate involved the issue between a strong army element which is insisting that plans for secession of North China be carried out, and civilian leaders who temporarily have restrained the Japanese military in China from enforcing the separatist movement.

The foreign minister generally was expected to support a compromise suggested by Akira Ariyoshi, Japanese Ambassador to China, which would permit the Nanking, or Chinese central government to retain much authority in the disputed area.

Ariyoshi recently conferred with Chiang Kai-Shek, Chinese military overlord, to the annoyance of Japanese military leaders.

Apparent suspension of the autonomy scheme found Tokyo officials, meanwhile, professing bewilderment over suspicions of Japanese motives in the movement. A foreign office spokesman said that since Japan never had predicted any definite date for autonomy there could be no question of "postponement."

"We understand such complicated intrigues no better than anyone else," the spokesman said, "and do not dare to predict future developments or when or how autonomy might come."

Peiping, Nov. 22 (AP).—Forces of the Japanese army were reported in various quarters tonight to be concentrated along China's Great Wall coincident with renewed agi-

Debtor Shippers Warned to Heed Roosevelt's Neutrality Plea.

Denial of Loans Appears Likely

The War Crisis.

Italy, worried by the American warning on oil shipments, hinted at trade reprisals if Secretary of the Interior Ickes' statement hampers receipt of war supplies.

Great Britain, in a firm reply to Italy's recent protest on League sanctions, said she accepted the "consequences which must inevitably ensue."

Premier Laval, in replying for France, pointed to his nation's need for quick operation of the League Covenant in event of attack as outweighing friendship for Italy.

The Italian high command in northern Ethiopia reported another victory in a skirmish with the forces of Ras Seyoum.

In Addis Ababa the government claimed a victory ten days ago in northern Ethiopia in which 300 Italians were slain.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

As Commerce Department figures were released indicating that during October exporters of raw materials had ignored President Roosevelt's injunctions against trade with Italy and Ethiopia, the Administration yesterday undertook as a part of its neutrality program more direct pressure than moral persuasion to end such commerce.

In letters to each of the American shipping companies indebted to the Federal Government, the United States Shipping Board Bureau projected an implied threat that ocean carriers engaged in carrying certain raw materials to Italy and Ethiopia might have difficulties in future financial arrangements here.

Meanwhile a high official asserted that it was to be expected that governmental agencies having mortgage relationships with business and industry would exert their influence to have their debtors comply with what has become the policy of the Government. This was taken to mean that financial pressure, wherever possible, would be applied to enforce the President's appeal that American enterprises forgo business with Italy and Ethiopia during the East African conflict.

Sole Action Thus Far.

So far as could be determined, however, the Shipping Board Bureau is the only Government agency to have made even a step toward applying such pressure. The Postoffice Department, which has ocean-mail contracts with a number of American ship lines, has taken no action. The intimation of the day, however, was that unless steps already taken are successful, all Government lending agencies, as well as the Postoffice Department, will act likewise.

A further illustration of what the Administration can do to stop such shipments was given Thursday by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, in his capacity as petroleum administrator, when he called on American oil companies to cease voluntarily shipments to Italy. Having wide powers over oil production, Ickes can enforce such suggestions, even though he lacks specific authority.

The Italians apparently realize this, for visible concern was expressed in Rome over the Ickes utterance. The Associated Press reported that immediately a fear this country would embargo oil shipments sprung up and that persons Departure of an ocean liner from Rio de Janeiro for New York was delayed yesterday so Senator and Mrs. Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, could board the ship and speed here to the bedside of their daughter, Mrs. Max Truitt.

Barkleys Speed to Daughter, Ill Here With Mystery Fever

The patient, it was learned, has been under treatment for ten days in Emergency Hospital suffering from a fever, the exact nature of which has baffled physicians.

While an Associated Press dispatch from Brazil described the condition of Mrs. Truitt as grave, Washington doctors said they would be unable to comment on prospects of recovery until they learned more about the ailment.

She is the wife of a Reconstruction Finance Corporation attorney.

Senator and Mrs. Barkley were nearing Rio de Janeiro aboard the liner Western World when notified by radio of their daughter's illness.

The Mason steamer, Southern Cross, due to have sailed from Rio de Janeiro Thursday night, awaited the arrival of the Barkleys at 4 a. m. yesterday and left at 4:30 for New York.

Dispatches reported the Southern Cross put off its departure "at the request of the United States Government."

The marriage of the former Marion Frances Barkley and Truitt was an outstanding event of the 1929 social season here. Truitt came to Washington from Columbia, Mo.

Many Towns Flooded; Tornado Hits Tip of Peninsula.

By the United Press.

Rome (Saturday), Nov. 23.—Seventy-two persons have been killed by a tornado and floods in southern Italy and northeast Sicily, authorities announced early today.

A violent wind and rain storm devastated the southern Province of Catanzaro. It then swept across the "toe" of the Italian peninsula, and developed into a tornado, accompanied by torrential rain, in the Province of Calabria and in northeast Sicily.

Swollen strems overflowed and flooded scores of small villages and farms, washing out many railway bed and highways and destroying communication systems.

The official death toll of 72 included eight at Catanzaro Sala, one at Catanzaro Marine; one at Santa Maria de Catanzaro, 14 at Sera San Bruno, three at Simfario, one at Gerocarne, four in the Chiara Valley and, unconfirmedly, 40 at Mercury May Fall to 26 Here; First Snow Falls at Midnight.

Winter's icy grasp will be felt in Washington early today, when the temperature may drop to a new low of 26 for the season, the Weather Bureau predicted last night.

The city's first snowfall of the season began shortly before midnight. In Anacostia, Georgetown and other outlying sections a mixture of snow and sleet fell. It melted on the ground. The sleet blurred motorists' windshields. Driving was made hazardous.

The Weather Bureau predicts today will be cloudy with below freezing temperatures at night. Tomorrow will be fair, with rising temperature.

Yesterday the mercury slid to a low of 35 at 7 a. m. This mark has been equaled twice before this season, both times in October cold snaps.

Father Shoots Football Coach, Then Self Over Son's Dismissal

By the United Press.

Lake Charles, La., Nov. 22.—Interrupting a football pep meeting of 500 students in the Lake Charles High School auditorium today, R. A. Russell summoned Coach R. S. Killen outside the room and shot him today because his own son had been dismissed from the team last year.

Russell fired one bullet into Killen's abdomen, then shot himself through the head. Both were wounded critically.

The coach was presiding over the pep meeting, prelude to tonight's game with Abbeville High School.

Russell's son, Clifford, was dismissed from the team last season, allegedly for breaking training rules.

In addition to his dismissal, the boy was said to have been given a belting by his teammates as punishment. The boy's father believed Killen participated in the hazing and had brooded over it for a year.

The shooting occurred just outside the auditorium. The students who a moment before had been rehearsing cheers and songs, were panic-stricken.

A manual training teacher, P. M. Blue, led the main body of students from the auditorium through a side door.

AAA Official Says Price Rise Will Aid Sale of Bales Held for Loans.

By the Associated Press.

Forecasting 13-cent cotton, Culley A. Cobb, chief of the AAA cotton section, yesterday expressed a belief that a "considerable part" of the 4,450,000 bales controlled by the Government under 12-cent loans would be moved to market this season.

"The demand for cotton is strong," Cobb said, "and the European stocks of American cotton have been exhausted. The price has seemed fairly steady recently above 12 cents."

Cobb indicated that an announcement of the 1936 cotton adjustment program might be made Tuesday or Wednesday.

AAA records showed that on November 1, a total of 4,450,678 bales were held under loans of 12 cents a pound. Title to this cotton is still held by the farmers, who obtained the loans, and before the cotton may be sold, officials said the price would have to equal the amount of the loan, plus interest and carrying charges.

It was estimated unofficially that before the loan cotton could be marketed, the price would have to be 13.50 cents a pound.

Cobb said he was "very optimistic" about the outlet for cotton. Most of the current cotton crop is moving out to market rapidly, he added, and records disclosed that on November 1, only 32,628 bales of 1935 cotton had been placed under the 10 cent loans being made this year.

The 12-cent loans made last year are due February 1. Officials said they believe that the December 8, cotton crop estimate would be slightly below the November estimate of 11,141,000 bales.

Cobb asserted he believed the movement of the 12-cent loan cotton would not have any material effect upon the market. An extension of the loan is expected, and Cobb said he believed that the farmers would cease sale of the loan cotton automatically to arrest any great price decline.

While details of the new cotton contracts remained officially undisclosed, it was said in some quarters that the contracts probably would cover four years and that an acreage reduction slightly larger than that required for this year might be included. The 1935 contracts provided for a minimum reduction of 25 per cent and a maximum of 35 per cent. The average reduction of the 1,300,000 contract signers was 32.8 per cent.

New Treatment Of Peritonitis

Leaving Wound Opened Minimizes Perils to Appendixes.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Nov. 22.—Leaving the surgical wound open until it healed was described today by Dr. H. A. Gamble, of Greenville, Miss., as an effective treatment in preventing deaths from infection following operations for ruptured appendixes.

Speaking at the closing session of the Southern Medical Association, Dr. Gamble said of 141 cases, 59 of them serious, treated in that manner, only one death resulted, a mortality rate of seven-tenths of one per cent.

It was brought out in discussion that of 349 consecutive cases of acute appendicitis performed in a St. Louis hospital by the old method of closing the wound and draining it, 20 deaths resulted, a mortality rate of 5.76 per cent.

The "open" procedure, Dr. Gamble explained, was to drain the cavity, pack the abdominal wound for 24 hours, then remove the packing and leave the wound open without dressing under a tent with a 40-candlepower electric light bulb to heat it.

The surgeon said his theory was that air aided the peritoneum—the tissue lining the abdomen—in fighting off infection and that closing the incision provided heat and moisture conditions favorable to the growth of anaerobic germs.

In the discussion, in which several surgeons commented on the treatment, Dr. Thomas A. Orr, of Kansas City, said: "The results are truly remarkable. If other surgeons can accomplish as much by open treatment of acute diffuse, peritonitis is about completely solved."

Humor Fund Urged As Rogers Tribute

Dill Suggests Education of Laugh-Makers.

By the Associated Press.

A proposal that a Will Rogers memorial trust fund be used to educate humorists because "all the world needs to laugh," was advanced yesterday by Clarence C. Dill, former Senator from Washington.

Dill wrote Jesse Jones, treasurer of the memorial committee:

"If the income of a million dollars, or even a half million dollars of this fund were set aside to assist in the development of those who have a sense of humor and who can help make the world laugh, I think it will be a natural memorial to this man who made the whole English-speaking world think while they laughed," the former Senator said.

Between You and Me

U. S. Studies Neutrality Primer; Trade Means Stake in War; America Can't Be Backstop.

—By Raymond Clapper—

THE full import of what the Administration is doing to discourage shipment of materials to Italy will be lost if it is interpreted purely as a move to aid the sanctionist powers in the League of Nations.

Equally important—more so than is generally realized now—is the fact that, through the official discouragement of sale of oil and other materials to Italy, this country is receiving its first elementary training in the practice of neutrality. It is about to learn, by a modest experience, something of the price which must be paid for neutrality.

It is important for the world that the first organized effort to choke off war by economic pressure shall succeed. But it would be just as well that the job be done by the nations which planted the seeds of Italy's mad dash for imperialism by their ruthless hogging of the spoils of war at Versailles.

More important for the United States is what may happen should the imperialisms of Europe clash again as they did in 1914. Many of those well-informed in foreign affairs already are resigned to such a European war. If it doesn't come, so much the better. But when the next war is being publicly forecast, and is said to be waiting merely until Germany has rearmed, it behooves the United States to be preparing for that dark day.

That preparation, if every index of public opinion is not totally wrong, has to be preparation for keeping out, not for getting in. Surely the United States, which was sucked into one war between rival European imperialisms, does not expect to step in if Germany finally rebels against the impossibly one-sided terms which were forced on her by the old men at Versailles. Why, it might be asked, should we attempt to maintain a status quo in Europe which is not stable enough within itself to win acquiescence during twenty years of grim aftermath?

But keeping out of war requires more than a pious wish. Book publishers are grinding out new volumes every day which rake over the history of how we were pulled, gently at first, and finally by irresistible tides, into the last war. We began to sell to the belligerents. Since England controlled the seas, our sales naturally were chiefly to the allies. American munitions plants were working 24 hours a day. Cotton, wheat and copper prices shot upward and the money came rolling in.

Then what happened? The story is told in the latest volume of Ray Stannard Baker's "Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson." In August, 1915, when the war was one year old, William G. McAdoo, then Secretary of the Treasury, wrote a letter to President Wilson stating that, unless large American credits were forthcoming, British and French purchases would have to be curtailed and the prosperity of American industry would be checked.

Baker says the huge financial stake we were coming to have in the allied cause brought heavy banking and business pressure on McAdoo. He enlisted the help of Lansing, who had become Secretary of State. Lansing wrote the President stating that stopping of our trade to Europe would be followed by "industrial depression * * * numerous failures, financial demoralization, and general unrest and suffering among the labor classes."

These pleas were merely in behalf of private credits to the allies.

Official war correspondence in the State Department archives is littered with appeals from allied officials arguing that for the United States to stop shipments, or to withhold economic aid, would be an unneutral act. They had been obtaining such aid. It was part of their strength. To cut it off would be a blow at them. That advanced the argument one step further.

Then, the final stage of the process is illustrated by the note which Walter Page, American Ambassador at London, sent to Washington March 5, 1917. While Page by that time had been largely discredited at Washington, his note shows the line of argument that was pounding in on President Wilson at the time additional German outrages were lashing up indignation in America.

"I think," he said, "that the pressure of this approaching crisis has gone beyond the ability of the Morgan Financial Agency for the British and French governments. The need is becoming too great and urgent for any private agency to meet. * * *

"Perhaps our going to war is the only way in which our present pre-eminent trade position can be maintained and a panic averted. The submarine had added the last item to the danger of a financial world crash. During a period of uncertainty about our being drawn into the war no more considerable credit can be privately placed in the United States and a collapse may come in the meantime."

The next step was our declaration of war.

By discouraging trade—only direct war materials and arms are banned under the neutrality act—we are giving the country a mild dose of what real neutrality means. Under conditions of modern war, neutral rights mean practically the privilege of selling to the side which controls the sea. And the World War taught us that this privilege is equivalent to acquiring a stake in the war and becoming a participant, if not with men, at least with materiel.

It taught us—and this is vital at the moment—that once a vested interest in a war is allowed to grow up through heavy exports, retreat is almost impossible. It taught us that once the flow of war trade starts, the die is cast.

Apparently the Administration sees clearly that the time to keep out of trouble is when it starts.

In the present conflict the effect of our policy is to parallel that of the League powers. It hits Italy. But the Italian offense is so flagrant that nobody minds. We understood the pressure inside Italy for expansion. But we do not approve of the methods. At the moment our sympathies run parallel with those of the sanctionist powers. But that should not be construed as a desire that the United States pledge itself to be backstop in any game henceforth.

A prominent Administration official returned from a New York speaking engagement considerably discouraged. Just before he spoke, a business man edged up to him and whispered:

"Won't you say something that will put the market up?"

When the official returned to Washington he sighed and observed, "They haven't learned a thing up there."

The companies affected, all controlled by the International Telephone & Telegraph Co., are the Commercial Cable Co., Commercial Pacific Cable Co., Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., All America Cables, Cuban All America Cables, and Postal Telegraph & Cable Co.

Those denied were:

Dunn, Mackay Radio & Telegraph of Delaware and Postal Telegraph-Cable of 35 States; Frank Flynn, Commercial Cable and Commercial Pacific Cable; John Goldhammer, All America Cables, Commercial Cable and Commercial Pacific Cable; Thomas V. Middle Course Urged for Bar Association Cannot Speak for Special Interests, Says President.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Nov. 22.—William L. Ransom, president of the American Bar Association, tonight advocated that the association steer a middle course regarding "new legislation and proposals of constitutional change that are agitating the country."

The New York lawyer said in an address prepared for delivery before the Southeastern regional meeting of the American Bar Association that "not a few people" are asking why the association does not "speak out boldly" against such legislation and changes.

Other citizens, he said, ask why the association does not "boldly champion proposals of social and economic reform and align itself on the side of social justice and public welfare."

"In each instance," Ransom said, "the questions reflect a wish that is father to the thought.

"Issues between warring political and social philosophies may and do agitate many lawyers deeply, but that does not make it proper that the organized bar should take up those issues and espouse particular philosophies.

"In the nature of things, the American Bar Association cannot rightly sponsor special causes; still less can it be the spokesman of special interests, and it cannot soundly take up the gage of battle in behalf of the views of any one class or group of lawyers, no matter how prominent and patriotic they may be."

Questions of constitutional interpretation as to the powers of government are in the first instance for the courts, Ransom said. He added that questions of the powers and policy of government and division of powers between the National Government and the States are "always for the people."

Ransom said there was "an especial danger" that the views of the better known lawyers "might be brought forward as the views of the average practicing lawyer, in the smaller cities and the towns throughout the entire country, who is the real backbone of the legal profession in America and the custodian of its future."

Business Asks 16 Million Cut In Ohio Costs

Davey Continues State's 'Get-It-Done' Group to Effect Slashes.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 22.—Business completed today its searching inquiry into Ohio's government and left with Gov. Martin L. Davey recommendations its volunteer workers said eventually could save the State more than $16,000,000 a year.

Col. C. O. Sherrill, who headed the survey group of 10 experts donated at Gov. Davey's request by industrial, agricultural and business organizations, asked the Governor to relieve them of "further duty and responsibility."

Thus ended the first phase of Ohio's business-government cooperative attack on inefficiency.

The Governor countered with an executive order continuing the work of his "get-it-done" committee, a body charged with finding ways of effecting as many of the recommendations as could be accomplished by executive action.

Asked Amendments.

A few weeks ago he asked the General Assembly to amend the necessary stautes to give force to recommendations which needed legislative action.

The Tax Commission, heedful of survey findings that it could reduce costs $931,299 a year, months ago dismissed 240 persons. Carlton S. Dargusch, commission vice chairman, said savings in salaries and maintenance would aggregate $500,000 a year.

The sales tax division, the commission's infant affiliate, alone has reducted its staff from 551 to 367 persons, he said.

See Highway Savings.

The survey's largest economy recommendation was aimed at the highway department—a suggestion that administrative changes would cut expenditures by $2,511,113 a year, with possible further savings through executive and legislative action of $1,478,864.

Delving as it did into all State departments and institutions, the survey at times became the object of heated statements by department heads.

Sherrill, in handing the Governor his final reports, assured Davey the survey's effort "has not been influenced or affected in the slightest degree by any consideration of partisan politics. It has been purely a business survey to establish the facts."

Deutsch Death Gives New York To Tammany

Fusion Government Now in Minority in Municipal Aldermanic Council.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 22.—Tammany Hall, through the accident of death, was once more in control of the government of New York City tonight.

The death early today of Bernard S. Deutsch, Fusion president of the board of aldermen, automatically elevated Timothy J. Sullivan, Tammany aldermanic vice chairman, to the presidency and forced Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia to the position of minority mayor.

Deutsch's death gave to Tammany control of the full municipal assembly. The Hall already held the board of aldermen. With acquisition of the comptroller's three votes in the board of estimate—the assembly's upper body—it gained a voting majority there of 9 to 7.

Special Election Unlikely.

A special election to fill out Deutsch's unexpired 4-year term may not be called until the ensuing general elections—in this case the elections of 1936.

Mayor LaGuardia, in tears, declared the cause of "good government" had received a severe setback.

"I am lonely, but I refuse to be discouraged," he declared.

The death of the aldermanic president is the second vital loss to the Fusion Party since LaGuardia assumed office in 1934. The first was the sudden death of Fusion Comptroller W. Arthur Cunningham, who was succeeded by Tammany Comptroller Frank J. Taylor.

Of the original Fusion majority of 13 on the board of estimate, LaGuardia now is certain only of his own three votes, the two votes of President Raymond V. Ingersoll, of Brooklyn, and the single vote of President Joseph Palma, of Staten Island.

Vital Issues Arising.

He is forced to assume a minority position at a time when his administration faces two vital governmental questions which are potential political issues in the 1937 municipal elections.

One is the question of taxation to meet New York's annual budget expenditures of nearly $600,000,000. The other is the vexing problem of unification of the city's complex transit system.

Supporters of Fusion regard LaGuardia's position as politically strategic, however, since the responsibility is shifted to Tammany's shoulders. It was also quickly pointed out that both Alfred E. Smith and Franklin D. Roosevelt, as Governor of New York, gained their greatest personal strength as minority Governors.

Americans Report Threats in Italy

Doctors Inform Consul of Students' Action.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Nov. 22.—Two American physicians protested to the American consul in Milan today that they had been threatened by Fascists, who mistook them for "Sancionist Englishmen."

In a report to Talbot Smith, the consul, Drs. Mersch and Bollman, of the Mayo Institute, Rochester, Minn., said they and their wives, were motoring through the university town of Padua when students spotted their British license plate and menaced them.

The car was surrounded and one tire slashed before police intervened, the Americans said.

Smith reported the protest to Ambassador Breckenridge Long here, but the officials did not signify what action they intend to take.

Four members of a Manhattan string quartet canceled a Rome concert engagement and hurridly left the country when they, too, were taken for Englishmen and attacked because they failed to salute a funeral procession for a Blackshirt.

Vice President En Route Home as Friends Push Renomination Drive.

By the Associated Press.

Somewhere on the Pacific, Vice President Garner celebrated yesterday his 67th birthday—and his first outside the United States.

As Garner cruised homeward from the Philippines, his friends here were looking ahead to the 1936 Democratic Convention.

Despite occasional reports that he was not entirely sympathetic with all New Deal activities, politicians were agreed everything pointed to the Texan's selection again as President Roosevelt's running mate.

The President himself has given the impression he wants Garner on the ticket, and has already tentatively accepted an invitation to attend the Texas Centennial celebration as Garner's guest.

Garner's associates feel he is in better shape physically than for many years. His duties as Presiding Officer of the Senate have not been so strenuous as his days in the House, where he was Democratic leader and then Speaker.

His secretary, Louis Friday, said: "He's in much better condition. There is not so much responsibility and worry."

"If "Cactus Jack" had been in Texas he undoubtedly would have been deer hunting. He usually spends his birthdays in Uvalde that way. A lover of simplicity, he rarely plans any special celebration. Today he probably was sitting around the ship with Mrs. Garner, and playing a little poker with the "boys."

Figures for 86 Cities Show Drop of 186 From 1934.

By the Associated Press.

Traffic brought death to 7,510 persons in 86 American cities during the first 46 weeks of this year, compared with 7,696 in the same 1934 period.

This death toll, reported yesterday by the Bureau of the Census, included 164 the week ended November 16 and 219 the preceding week.

Topping all was Chicago with 21, compared with 20 the previous week. New York had 15 last week, against 25 the previous week; Los Angeles 10, against 8; Philadelphia 7, against 6.

Fewer fatalities were reported last week by 37 cities than in the week before. No deaths were reported in 38 cities.

Bonus March Plan Barred by Legion

Des Moines, Iowa, Nov. 22.—The American Legion will urge bonus legislation, but will not march on Washington to secure its passage, Ray Murphy, national commander, said tonight.

Murphy's statement was an answer to the advice of United States Senator William G. McAdoo, who today advocated that veterans march on the National Capital and "use military tactics" in demanding the bonus.

Utah Cult Waits Resurrection Of Woman Dead Ten Months

Return to Life Will Come Soon, Says Woman Leader of Sect.

By the Associated Press.

Blanding, Utah, Nov. 22.—Members of a strange cult, isolated on the arid slopes of southeastern Utah, awaited tonight the fulfillment of the ritual to restore to life Mrs. Edith Pashal, who died 10 months ago.

"The recreation will be soon now," a reporter for the Salt Lake City Telegram quoted Mrs. Marie M. Ogden, leader of the group, self-styled the "home of truth," after an interview.

Daily the unuried body of Mrs. Pashal is bathed in salt water. For three months members of the cult have been watching the "recreation," Mrs. Ogden said.

No outsider is permitted to see the body which lies in a closely guarded building at Photograph Gap, near Blanding. The State Health Department recently was forced to obtain a court order to inspect it and make sure it was not a menace to public health.

"I cannot tell you just when she will come back," said Mrs. Ogden who, with her husband and three other members of the cult, carry out the daily ritual. "That is in the future, just like the coming of the Master.

"Her return to full life must be gradual as was her disintegration period."

Mrs. Ogden said she was conscious of a living presence in the dead woman. "I speak with her almost daily," she said. "Of course, this is in soul language."

When the "resurrection is completed" Mrs. Ogden expects rapid success for the "home of truth."

"We expect to grow by leaps and bounds next year, for there are many people who will be coming," she said.

Plans have been drawn for a chapel that will seat 1,000 worshippers.

Attacker of Girl Is Doomed to Hang

Marijuana Smoker's Plea of Insanity Unavailing.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Nov. 22.—A 25-year-old Puerto Rican today was sentenced to hang for criminal assault on a 10-year-old girl—an assault he said was committed while he was temporarily insane from smoking marijuana cigarettes.

Augusto Perez, the defendant, was convicted in criminal court here. Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis passed sentence today.

Perez was tried under a plea of not guilty because of insanity. He was found sane and guilty, however.

Marijuana, a narcotic, is not outlawed by Federal statutes. Maryland and other States, however, have passed laws against its sale or use.

WPA, at 51,000 Jobs Per Day, Speeds Up Pace

First 'Bulge' Reported in Drive; Campaign Still Short of Goal.

Speeding up relief employment to more than 51,000 jobs a day, the Works Progress Administration yesterday reported its first "bulge" in its job program—work for 359,120 more persons in the week ended November 16.

Undaunted by slow progress to date, WPA officials again predicted the Government will be out of the direct relief business by December 1.

But that entails finding 1,132,758 more jobs in the last two weeks of the drive, at a rate of 80,811 a day, and striking 22 more States off the Federal dole list.

Hopkins to Answer Critics.

Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, meantime, plans to answer widespread criticism of the job lag, in a speech tour through four Central States in the next fortnight, it was said.

Speaking Monday night at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, he later will talk in Cleveland, St. Louis and Chicago.

He is expected to repeat the defense of his program made before the convention of mayors here, and answer continuing attacks on the WPA by the Republican national committee.

Although only 26 States up to the present have received their last direct relief grants, Aubrey Williams, assistant WPA administrator, repeated yesterday that the dole will be cut off entirely by December 1, when he hopes the works program will be in full swing.

Direct Grants Increased.

The administration already this year has made more direct aid grants to the States than it made in all of 1934—$1,283,171,341 since January this year, as compared with $1,068,970,711 in 1934.

If the 3,500,000 job goal is reached by December 1, a total of 1,132,758 more jobs must be found to supplement the 2,367,242 handed out as of November 16. That means 566,379 jobs for each of the remaining two weeks. It will require a last-minute spurt not reflected in earlier figures, although in the last month the WPA has put two-thirds as many persons to work as in the entire previous period.

Of the 2,367,242 persons employed on November 16, Hopkins' organization, the WPA, put 1,624,112 persons to work; the Civilian Conservation Corps, 539,403, and other Federal projects, 203,727.

New York City continued to lead other communities with 242,656, and Pennsylvania was next with 199,656. In the District, 8,612 persons were at work under the program; in Maryland, 14,582, and in Virginia, 41,397.

The President originally had set November 1 as the full quota relief "deadline," but Hopkins, on his return from the West, moved up that date one month.

Lewis Is Rebuked By A. F. L. Council

Prints Green's Reply to Convention Charges.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor yesterday delivered a 25-page rebuke to John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and one of the country's foremost labor leaders.

The rebuke, made a part of the report of the proceedings of the recent federation convention in Atlantic City, grew out of criticism by Lewis of the present leadership of the federation. The differences between Lewis and William Green, federation president, grow out of opposing theories as to whether unions should be organized "vertically" or by crafts.

Lewis' charges made at the convention are followed in the report by the subsequently prepared answer, written by Green. The situation presaged a continuation of the differences which may split the federation asunder.

ond ship of the sky fleet, the Philippine Clipper, arrived at Acapulco, Mex., from Miami, Fla., on its way here to enter the same service.

Farley announced the China Clipper's mail load brought a profit of $47,000 to the Postoffice Department. The postoffice gross revenue from the 115,000 letters carried, he said, was $63,000 and the maximum cost $16,000.

The China Clipper's first scheduled stop is Honolulu, 2,400 miles away, which it is expected to reach in about 18 hours. Thereafter it will touch Midway, Wake and Guam Islands en route to Manila.

President Sends Message.

"Please convey to the people of the Pacific Coast," said the President's message, "the deep interest and heartfelt congratulations of an air-minded sailor. Even at this distance I thrill to the wonder of it all."

Farley said the undertaking marked the beginning "of the greatest and most significant achievement in the marvelous and fascinating development of air transportation."

A letter from President Roosevelt to President Manuel Quezon of the new Philippine Commonwealth was handed by Farley to Capt. Musick.

23 Employes to Board Her.

The China Clipper carried no passengers but Pan American officials said 23 line employes would board it at Honolulu for transportation to stations at Midway and Wake Islands, Guam and the Philippines.

Capt. Musick, who previously piloted a smaller clipper plane on exploratory flights along the route, was aided at the controls by a crew of eight engineering, navigation and wireless experts.

Members of the crew, in addition to Capt. Musick, a veteran of Pan American's Caribbean service, were R. O. D. Sullivan, first officer; George King, second officer; C. D. Wright, first engineering officer; V. A. Wright, second engineering officer; Frederick A. Noon, navigation officer; William T. Jarboe, first radio officer; Thomas R. Runnells, second radio officer, and Max Weber, second junior flight officer.

Postmaster General James A. Farley took a personal hand in loading the first air mail on the transpacific service to Manila shortly before the take-off of the huge Pan-American Airways China Clipper, at 6:46 p. m. yesterday, Washington time. Mail weighed nearly two tons, consisting of 100,000 pieces.

Three Women, Boy Among Traffic Casualties in Washington.

John H. Hanley, 38, was struck and killed by an automobile last night as he was walking near his home on Central avenue in Capitol Heights, Md.

Alvin Stommel, 19, also of Capitol Heights, brought Hadley to Casualty Hospital here. Hospital attendants said he died of a crushed head.

Stommel, according to Washington police, admitted he was the driver of the machine that hit Hanley. He was tured over to police at Marlboro, Md., for questioning.

Walking with Hanley at the time was Elmer Brown, of Clifton Station, Va., who was taken by police to Marlboro to give his version of the accident.

Three women were among Washington's traffic casualties yesterday. Mrs. Fannie Allen, 59, of 1653 U street southeast, and Mrs. Sarah Scaggs, 73, of 1614 V street southeast, suffered leg fractures and other injuries when struck at Good Hope road and Fourteenth street southeast by an auto, police said was driven by Brittanier Annan, 25, of Annapolis.

Mrs. Anna Deehl, 60, of the South Maryland Apartments, Ninth and E streets northeast, suffered back, arm and head injuries in an automobile collision at Tenth and C streets southwest. She was being treated at Garfield Hospital.

Thomas A. Bruce, 67, of 9311 I street northwest, was taken to Georgetown Hospital with lacerations of the nose and eye and a possible brain concussion suffered when he was hit by a street car at New York avenue and Tenth street northwest.

Carl Van Diver, 6, was seriously injured by an automobile yesterday because, police said, he started to cross Auburn avenue in Bethesda, Md., changed his mind and ran back toward the curb into the car's path.

Carl, who lives at 138 Arlin avenue in Bethesda, was in Children's Hospital in Washington last night suffering a fracture of the right leg and shock.

Police said the boy was crossing the street with a group of friends on his way home from school for lunch. The other boys crossed the street, Carl ran back.

AAA May Ease Potato Men's Tax Allotment

5-Bushel Exemption May Be Raised to 50; Advisory Board Named.

By the Associated Press.

An increase from 5 to 50 bushels in the tax exemption allotments for individual potato growers under the 1935-36 control act was reported as a possibility yesterday as the AAA announced organization of a national potato advisory committee.

The control law, which becomes effective December 1, provides that a producer may have an automatic tax exemption allotments of five bushels annually. A tax of ¾ of a cent a pound is to be collected on all potatoes sold in excess of the national allotment of 226,600,000 bushels.

AAA officials have informed committee members, however, that they believe authority to raise the tax exemption allotment exists under the law. The committee promptly adopted a recommendation for such action.

Aids Small Growers.

Lifting this exemption, it was said, would eliminate many thousands of small producers from necessity of obtaining a special allotment or from paying the excess quota levy.

It was said, however, that all growers who desired to sell potatoes would have to apply for the automatic tax exemption allotment.

The recommendation provided that regulations be drawn to permit all growers who sell not more than 50 bushels of potatoes annually to obtain tax exemption stamps sufficient to cover sales in the amount of their actual average sales during the base period, 1932-35.

The National Advisory Committee contended that the intent of the act was to prevent periodic accumulation of large commercial surpluses and not to interfere with the established practices of small non-commercial growers.

Changes Favored.

The committee indorsed proposals for changes in the potato act which were recommended last month by the previously formed potato program development committee. The proposals included a provision for a referendum of producers to determine whether the act should remain in effect—with approval necessary by two-thirds of producers entitled to an allotment—and a provision to exclude the consumer from the penalty provisions of the act concerning packing and stamping of packages.

The national committee elected an executive committee to maintain contact between the potato section of the AAA and representatives of the national committee in various regions. Members of the executive committee are Joseph Andrasen, St. Anthony, Idaho; Elmer Mitchell, Rochester, Ind.; G. F. Harmount, Houma, La.; A. J. Beck, Washburn, Me., and Roy A. Porter, Elba, N. Y.

Other members of the committee are:

B. Drummond Ayres, chairman, Accomac, Va.; M. I. Chenoweth, Del Norte, Colo.; H. H. Tanner, Palatka, Fla.; Scott Kelsey, jr., Topeka, Kans.; Clifford L. Belden, Bradstreet, Mass.; H. H. P.U.C. Demands Name of Utility Shares' Buyer

1,800 Were Purchased in Washington Gas Light Firm in Jersey.

Prompt disclosure of the identity of the purchaser of 1,800 shares of the trust which holds a controlling interest in the Washington Gas Light Co. and its subsidiaries was demanded by the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

Filing of such information without undue delay was asked in a letter sent by Riley E. Elgen, commission chairman, to Arthur H. Dean, of the law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, New York, representatives of the owners of the trustees holding the stock of the local utility.

The 1,800 shares of beneficial interest in the trust were sold in Jersey City Wednesday by the General Investment Corporation and the United Founders Corporation, each of which, it was disclosed by the sale, had larger holdings in the trust than the records of the utilities commission disclosed.

The shares were purchased by Outerbridge & Wells, 15 Exchange place, Jersey City, N. J., for $3.50 a share. Identity of the real purchasers for whom that concern bought the shares has not been disclosed.

"As soon as these shares are presented for transfer we shall advise you as to the names in which they are transferred," Dean wrote the commission. "In the meantime, the trustees of Washington and Suburban Companies are without any information as to who the purchasers of these shares may be."

Daughter of Mrs. Pearce Rayner Was an Honor Student at Smith.

Helen Edwards Rayner, an honor student at Smith College in the class of 1934, died in her home at 3502 Thirtieth street northwest yesterday of pneumonia that developed from a throat infection with which she had become ill Sunday.

She was the daughter of Mrs. W. Pearce Rayner and the late W. Pearce Rayner, an active figure in Washington business and civic circles for many years until his death in 1928. Mr. Rayner had been an official of the White Motor Co. and was identified with traffic studies here.

A few weeks ago Miss Rayner returned to Washington to live with her family, leaving a position she had held for about a year with the investment banking firm of Macubin-Legg in Baltimore. About a week ago she had obtained a position with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation here.

Miss Rayner attended public schools in Washington and was graduated from Central High School in 1930 and from Smith College with honors in economics in 1934. She was a member of the Smith College Club here and was well known in social and collegiate circles. She was 22 years old.

She is survived, besides her mother, by a sister, Hester M. Rayner, now a student at Smith College, and a brother, Pearce Tyler Rayner, who is attending Westtown School, Westtown, Pa.

Funeral services will be held Monday.

Japan's Policy In North China Splits Cabinet

tation for the autonomy of North China.

Chinese sources expressed concern at what they said was the massing of Japanese cavalry and infantry troops 70 miles north of Peiping.

The latest concentration was said to be at Kupeikow and to be receiving reinforcements constantly.

Significance was attached here to the adoption by the Congress of the Kuomintang (National Government Party), at Nanking, of measures providing for "a great emphasis on the enforcement of local self-government throughout the country."

(A Shanghai dispatch said it was reported there Japanese militarists are reopening negotiations with factions seeking North China's autoomy and that uneasiness there was increased.

(Maj. Gen. Kenji Doihara of the Japanese army was said to be pushing the autonomy movement with the co-operation of the Japanese garrison at Tientsin, despite the recent delay.)

vised its own rules to permit voidance of registrations where courts hold power groups cannot protect their rights in this way.

A new clause was written into the SEC rules stating that registration or compliance with any provision of the act "shall not be deemed a waiver of any constitutional or legal rights."

Three companies, including the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., of Baltimore, and its subsidiaries, which operate in Maryland, yesterday applied to the SEC for exemption from the holding company law, which affects only companies doing an interstate business.

The Consolidated Gas Co., of New York, through a subsidiary, has served notice that it does not intend to register. Apparently uninfluenced by SEC "assurances" of yesterday, most other large companies are said to be planning to withhold registrations. The Edison Electric Institute, a trade organization, membership of which includes many public utility companies, has retained counsel to test the constitutionality of the act, and earlier this week the law was challenged in the courts by the United Gas Improvement Co., of Philadelphia, the Philadelphia Electric Co., and the Delaware Electric Power Co., in Wilmington.

Plans Set Forth.

Elaborating somewhat on the SEC statement, the letter sent out by Attorney General Cummings yesterday concisely set forth how the Government intends to proceed.

"In enforcing the act," said Cummings, "it is proposed promptly to institute civil proceedings against one or more large and important companies who may fail to register, to enforce compliance with its provisions and to seek decisions from the Supreme Court sustaining the validity of the act.

"In the meanwhile it is not proposed to institute criminal proceedings, and if later it should become necessary to institute criminal proceedings against any company, it is not the intention of this department to seek to exact penalties for earlier offenses which might unduly penalize the investors in the offending company."

Cummings said there is "no public interest to be served" by the utility companies themselves, by instituting manifold court tests.

He called on United States attorneys, nevertheless, to inform the Justice Department promptly "of any action which may be instituted in your district, whether or not you are made a party, to attempt to test the validity of the act."

In explaining its position that registration does not constitute a waiver of any constitutional rights which the registering company may have, the SEC said:

"The commisison, under its rule-making power, expressly permits the registrant to reserve his constitutional rights. The commission is prepared to go further and accept a notification that expressly stipulates that the notification of registration will, at the option of the registrant, be deemed void if registrant's registration of its constitutional rights is adjudged void or ineffective.

"No possible ground or reason remains for any company to fail to file a simple notification and registration under these circumstances as a sheeer precautionary matter for the protection of its investors."

Yearly Awards For Valor Given Three Firemen

Privates Gray, Reardon, Brown Honored for Heroism in Fire Rescues.

A burly dark-haired fireman who risked his life to save a woman and her child—Private Roger Gray, of 714 Sixteenth street southeast—last night received a gold medal for having performed the outstanding act of valor in the District Fire Department during the last fiscal year.

A silver medal went to Private George T. Reardon, of 3314 Mount Pleasant street northwest, for having helped in that feat, receiving and carrying the child down a flame-encircled ladder.

And a bronze bar went to Private William W. Brown, of 1151 Forty-fourth place southeast, rescuer of a fainting fellow fireman.

These constituted the annual awards of the special committee on valor in the police and fire departments, set up by Congress. The chairman, Brig. Gen. John A. Johnston, U. S. A. (resigned), former District Commissioner, presented the medals and bar, along with certificates, to Chief Engineer Charles E. Schrom at the Board of Trade meeting in the Willard, and Schrom pinned the emblems on his subordinates.

Gray and Reardon were heroes of a fire that swept an apartment house at 1643 Connecticut avenue northwest last May 18. Gray climbed a ladder to a fourth floor balcony to save the woman and child. Reardon followed to carry the child.

Brown rushed into the flaming Northminster Presbyterian Church at Rhode Island avenue and Eleventh street northwest, last January 16, and rescued a fellow fireman who, "practically blinded, was staggering around amid falling timbers," Gen. Johnston continued.

On the awards committee are Gen. Johnston, Robert V. Fleming, Henry G. Stein, Chief Schrom and Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of metropolitan police. Maj. Brown did not submit any names for this year's police awards.

Late Hours of Girl Blamed for Shooting

Chicago, Nov. 22 (AP).—Because Stella Salapatck, 20, stayed out late nights the police said her mother, Mrs. Rose Salapatck, 45, and her brother, Joseph, 19, are near death in a hospital.

They were shot last night by Mrs. Salapatck's husband, Walter, 45, following an argument over the girl's conduct. Salapatck then wounded himself.

Stella left home before the shooting.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said, had become "head of the most powerful organization in the country, except the Democratic Party."

At the same time, Eugene Meyer, former governor of the Federal Reserve Board and publisher of The Washington Post, noting that Fleming had always co-operated with Government officials, emphasized:

"Asking the co-operation of public-spirited men and getting it is one of the most important functions of a public official. This country is full of business men willing and able to serve when they are called upon."

And of Fleming, Meyer said:

"He has gone far and he will go farther."

Called Best Qualified.

Eccles had told the Board of Trade president, John Saul, that he did not know whether he could attend. When he did appear, he had no prepared speech. When he spoke, he spoke slowly and chose his words carefully.

"This is a pleasure and an honor," he said. "We will realize the importance of the position Bob was recently elected to when we realize that an organization is no greater than its leadership and when we realize the public nature of the banking business, besides the size of the organization over which our friend presides, and when we realize the decline in esteem and confidence which the banking business in the last few years has suffered and which I'm glad to say it is now rapidly overcoming.

"There is not in the whole banking fraternity any man better qualified to fill this position at this most important period in our history.

"The position requires a temperate man, a man of intellectual integrity, a man of practical and broad knowledge of banking, a man of a social point of view, a man who is tolerant, a man who is co-operative, a man who is sympathetic."

Such a man, he said, is Fleming—"there are few men who have impressed me so favorably; there are few men whom I have learned to respect and love more than I do Bob Fleming."

President Is Lauded.

Chief of an association whose relations in the past have not been of the most friendly with the Administration, Fleming nevertheless opened with words of "high tribute for the President and the officials of the Government and Gov. Eccles for their fair and fine attitude that was exhibited at all times in the discussions of the last banking act."

He praised that act, now drastically revamped from its first version, attacked widely in banking circles, and said he intended to spread wide among bankers the knowledge of the opportunities it afforded.

"The purposes of this association," Fleming said, noting that it numbered 12,065 banks among its members, nearly 90 per cent of the Nation's 15,752, "are not political. This association is organized for the good of banking and for the public interest. So far as it is in my power, it shall not be a political football."

He had a word for business everywhere.

"The bankers of this country have been charged by those who do not know for the acts and misstatements of a few. I say to you that the banking of this country is so interwoven with business that we need you and you need us. Let there be no mystery between us."

High praise for Fleming's services to banking and the District were voiced by Commissioner Hazen, Saul, Charles H. Doing, president of the District Bankers Association; Frank J. Hogan, general counsel for the District Bankers Association; Harry J. Haas, of Philadelphia, past president of the American Bankers Association, and A. B. Taylor, treasurer of the American Bankers Association.

Others Introduced.

Others introduced by Saul included Corcoran Thom, sr., president of the American Security & Trust Co.; J. Frank Campbell, president of the Anacostia Bank; Maurice D. Rosenberg, president of the Bank of Commerce & Savings; Clarence F. Burton, president of the City Bank of Washington; James A. Messer, of the Columbia National Bank; E. C. Graham, president of the Hamilton National Bank.

Floyd E. Davis, president of the Lincoln National Bank; Lanier P. McLachlen, president of the McLachlen Banking Corporation; Willard G. Barker, executive vice president of the Morris Plan Bank; C. H. Pope, executive vice president of the Munsey Trust Co.; Victor B. Deyber, president of the Second National Bank; Francis G. Addison, president of the Security Savings & Commercial Bank; Ord Preston, president of the Union Trust Co.; Harry G. Meem, president of the Washington Loan & Trust Co.

Karl William Corby, vice president; H. G. Hoskinson, secretary; Albert S. Gatley, treasurer, and Hogan, counsel, all of the District Bankers Association;

Commissioners Present.

velocity of money must be related to the volume of actual and potential production of real wealth."

He questioned how that kind of inflation could result when men and plants were idle, pointing out that "there can be speculative excesses when surplus funds bid up stocks or real estate, but inflation in the generally accepted sense can only come about by increasing the means of payment in the hands of people who are willing to spend faster than we can increase production."

Discounts Fears.

"We are a long way from such a period of inflation," he added.

The anxitey now being expressed about "inflation," he contended, relates to "stock market inflation," a fear that the excesses of 1929 might be repeated. He argued there was nothing the Reserve Board could do about the present stock market situation because it is not being financed with credit. But, he emphasized, neither he nor the Reserve Board "is indifferent to or disinclined to do whatever is within his or its power to prevent the development of an unsound condition."

Eccles pointed out that the total of security loans by banks both to customers other than brokers and to brokers had shown "no growth since the middle of March, when the present rise in security prices began," but on the contrary had shown a decline between March 13 and November 13. He cited figures that indicated the total decline in this period had been $187,000,000.

"The rise in security prices has not been financed by bank credit," Eccles continued. The securities are being bought mostly for cash out of the abundant investment funds in the hands of corporations and individuals and out of funds sent to this country by foreigners who wish to invest here because they believe that this is the safest and most profitable use for their money.

"I wish to emphasize two points as strongly as I can: First, I think that there is an element of safety and of strength in the fact that the security purchases are being financed out of cash without increased use of bank credit. I am doubtful whether a run-away stock market situation can proceed very far without being reflected in an increased demand for borrowed funds.

Holds Funds Available.

"In this connection I wish also to point out that the amount of money going into the stock market is not, as some have contended, depriving the capital market of adequate funds and thus retarding recovery. That ample funds are available in the capital markets is evidenced by the fact that offerings of long-term securities and mortgages are being absorbed at yields which have been steadily declining.

"The second point which I wish to emphasize even more strongly is that those who are suggesting that the Federal Reserve system should do something about stock-market conditions at present are under the mistaken impression that the system can intervene in the market at any time. As a matter of fact, the system has no authority whatsoever to curb buying of securities by individual or corporations, whether foreign or domestic. Its only authority in this matter is over margin requirements, which apply only when transactions are on credit, as is not the case to any extent at the present time. The only power the system has is to control the speculative use of bank credit. There is no speculative use of bank credit in the present situation.

Therefore, I should like to correct, if possible, the idea that the Federal Reserve system is neglecting at this time to exercise its power over stock-market speculation.

"As for the general business and credit situation and the volume of member bank reserves—it is clear that there is no excessive expansion in any field at this time. There is no evidence of accumulation of inventories, or of frantic bidding for a limited amount of goods, or of an expansion of bank credit, save through the purchase of Government securities. The turnover of deposits is still relatively low.

"The general credit situation as well as developments in the stock market require close and careful study as to the appropriate time for and method of action. This close study is being given by the system, including not only the board of governors itself, but the open-market committee and the advisory council as well.

Scouts Push 10-Year Plan For Members

Boys to Share in Opening of Santa Claus Lane; Awards Slated.

Accomplishment of the ten-year Boy Scout program has been shown as the objective of every scoutmaster and Scout, it was announced at Boy Scout headquarters here yesterday.

This program was the principal topic of discussion at a monthly meeting of Scout commissioners recently.

The group represented the 14 Scout districts in Washington and counties in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Meeting of the ten-year-program objective, which is "one of every four new male citizens a four-year Scout-trained man" by 1942, depends on two factors—recruiting boys for scouting and holding them. Recruiting depends on enlarging present troops and organizing new ones. Holding boys depends on a good leader and a good program.

The two tests of a good program and good leader are attendance at Scout meetings and annual re-registration.

Special Service.

Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, pastor of the First Baptist Church, at Sixteenth and O streets, and a member of the National Boy Scout Council, has announced a special Scout service at the church at 7:45 p. m. Sunday. Troop 43, led by Scoutmaster L. B. Grening, is in charge of the program. Scout executives and District Commissioners will participate.

The bugling contest Saturday at Powell Junior High School had the largest participation since this annual affair was inaugurated. By decision of judges from the Marine Band, Scout Spencer Russell, of Troop 51, was chosen council bugler for 1936. He was presented with a new bugle. Harry Hayes, of Troop 101, was rated as assistant council bugler. Division buglers selected for their respective divisions were:

First division, Bert Anspon, Troop 12; second division, Robert McWilliams, Troop 23; third division, E. Conova, Troop 636; third division, Gordon Pool, Troop 49; fourth division, Richard Rozzell, Troop 43; thirteenth division, Guy Appell, Troop 9; fourteenth division, Don Miller, Troop 66; Arlington County division, Edward Reichert, Troop 101.

The colorful opening of Santa Claus lane in Columbia Heights will take place on Monday evening, with participation by scouts. Mobilization of scouts is requested at Fourteenth and Shepherd streets northwest at 7:30 p. m.

Bridge Dedication.

Scouts also have been asked to assist in the dedication of Calvert Street Bridge, which will be held in the evening either of December 10 or 17.

President Richard Miller, of the C. M. O., Camp Roosevelt Honor Tribe, announces a five-star program for November 30 at 7:30 p. m. at the Y. M. C. A. Assembly Hall.

At the Powell Junior High Saturday at 7:30 p. m., the last court of honor will be held before the quarterly court of awards, scheduled at the same place on December 7. Since this court of award is expected to be the largest in history, troops have been asking for seating reservations so that all scouts in their troop may be seated together.

Troops of the Thirteenth Division, comprising part of Northeast Washington, have started collecting beskets for Thanksgiving and Christmas good turns. The division this year will also gather and repair toys to be given out Christmas.

Drum Corps Formed.

A drum and bugle corps of 20 boys has been organized in the division and held its first meeting Wednesday evening.

Troop 20 celebrated last night its success in putting on a Scout play for several different organizations during the past month.

To avoid duplication in giving at Thanksgiving and Christmas, Time Scout Troops have been asked to check with the Council of Social Agencies before making gifts.

Ye Bonnie Hieland Scouts are now organizing Washington's first kilties troop. It will be composed of Scotch boys and will be sponsored by one of the clans, but the leadership will be in conformity with the Boy Scout constitution.

The annual report of the 1935 Camp Roosevelt season shows that Troop 5 at the St. Alban's Episcopal Church, led by John Bayless, scoutmaster, had the greatest attendance of any troop at camp. A total of 33 of their Scouts spent one or more weeks at the camp. Troop 69, Thomas A. King, scoutmaster, had 29 scouts at camp, while Troop 97, William Rohrer, scoutmaster, had 24. The Capital Division, under District Commissioner Louis F. Nickel, was the leading division at Camp Roosevelt with 55 Scouts from the seven troops. Rock Creek, under Dr. William T. McClosky, had 52 Scouts from six troops, and the White House Division, Richard Rule, commissioner, with 51 Scouts from nine troops, had the greatest troop representation.

Move for Receivership For Federal Life Voided

Justice Jennings Bailey, in the District Supreme Court, yesterday dismissed a suit by John A. Marshall, superintendent of insurance for the District, to appoint a receiver for the Federal Life Insurance Co.

Marshall informed Justice Bailey the corporation has met the alleged deficiency in assets which caused him to request the receivership.

Italians Again Beat Off Attack By Ras Seyoum

Ethiopians Concentrate Fire on Officers to Shatter Morale.

By the Associated Press.

Makale, Nov. 22.—An Italian column in the rugged Tembien Mountain region reported today it had beaten off a rear-guard attack by the persistent Ras Seyoum, Ethiopian commander in the north.

Seyoum, repulsed yesterday by battalions of Italian-trained Askaris at the head of the column in a sharp clash at Abaro Pass, rallied his warriors and skirted the Italians to attack from the rear.

But the invaders were prepared and fought off Seyoum's men without losses, the reports said.

The Ethiopians, officers believed, are concentrating their fire on Italian officers in command of the native troops, who make up the spearhead of the invading forces.

A captain was killed in the Tembien skirmishes with Ras Seyoum, and four Italian officers were wounded in fights between Gen. Mariotti's Danakil column and Ethiopian forces at Azbi, east of Makale.

Kill Officers.

Since the Italian flying columns have been made up almost entirely of natives, the white officers among the blacks have provided conspicuous targets for enemy snipers.

In addition, it is believed here the Ethiopians hope to shatter the morale of the natives fighting for Italy by cutting down their officers.

Developments of the last few days provided indications that Seyoum intends to harass the columns penetrating the Tembien region west of Makale at every opportunity.

For his first attack he chose the moment while the Italian column, halting for the night, was organizing itself in defense position by placing machine gun nests and light artillery on its flanks.

Today the "Desperata" squadron of Count Galeazzo Ciano, Premier Mussolini's war bird son-in-law, received the badge of assault groups, a dagger surrounded by wings, for its part in the great bombardment at Mai Mescic Monday.

Medal Conferred.

A gold medal of valor was conferred in memory of Sergt. Birago, who died of wounds received during the bombardment, in which Italians claim 2,000 Ethiopians were slain. (The Ethiopian command insisted only 30 were killed).

Italy's flying prince, the Duke of Bergamo, flew today with Count Ciano on a long reconnaissance flight south of Makale. It was Ciano's first flight since his plane was riddled with anti-aircraft shells during Monday's battle.

The fliers sighted only a few Ethiopians.

Two small groups of tents were seen in the Mai Mescic valley, near the locale of Monday's battle, but the occupants fled into nearby mountains and forests as soon as they heard the plane's motor.

The Duke of Bergamo is vice commander of the Gran Sasso division, which is being held in reserve of the Italian advance.

British, French Replies to Italy

England Ready to Take 'Consequences' for Sanctions.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 22.—The text of Great Britain's note in reply to Italy's protest against sanctions follows:

By the note which your excellency (Italian Ambassador Grandi) was so good as to address to me (Foreign Secretary Hoare) November 11, the Italian government have thought fit to draw attention of his majesty's government to the responsibility entailed by putting into force measures proposed by the Committee of Coordination now in session at Geneva and the consequences, in the judgment of the Italian government, likely to result from application of these measures.

In reply to the general observations advanced by the Italian government, his majesty's government feel bound to emphasize, having themselves taken part in the discussions at Geneva, that they are in a position to bear witness to the constant anxiety evidenced alike by the Council of the Assembly and other organs of the League of Nations, fully conscious as they have been of the gravity of their responsibilities, to carry out their duties in a spirit of impartiality and to concede the utmost possible weight to the legitimate interests of Italy.

No "Need" for New Talks.

His majesty's government are so convinced of the accuracy of this estimate of the work already performed by the League of Nations in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian dispute that they feel no useful purpose would be served by reopening or recapitulating a discussion of questions raised in the Italian note.

His majesty's government must, therefore, content themselves by recalling that on October 7 delegates of all governments represented in the Council—with the exception of the Italian delegate—confronted with the task of applying provisions of the Covenant, which are of mandatory character, to facts which were not in dispute, felt themselves obliged to affirm that the Italian government had had recourse to war in violation of Article XII.

Strong as is the feeling of friendship toward Italy which inspires the United Kingdom, his majesty's government felt themselves bound to assent to this decision and accept the consequences which must inevitably ensue.

His majesty's government do not conceal their anxiety to facilitate so far as lies within their power as a member state of the League of Nations, and at the earliest possible moment, at settlement of this regrettable conflict now in progress.

Cite "Obligations."

But they are not able wholly to pass over the implication contained in the last paragraph of your excellency's note, under reply, which refers to the "free and sovereign judgment" which his majesty's government are alleged to be at liberty to apply to a determination of their course of action.

His majesty's government, in subscribing to the Covenant, did not indeed abandon or renounce their own free and sovereign judgment, but undertook to exercise it thenceforth in accordance with the obligations of that instrument. No other attitude is open to them and they would naturally desire to see the Italian government place a similar construction on their own adhesion to the Covenant.

Paris Cites Covenant in Answer to Protest From Rome.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Nov. 22.—The text of the French reply to Italy's sanctions protest follows:

By verbal note of November 11, the royal government of Italy considered it its duty to call the attention of the French government to the responsibilities and implied consequences brought, according to it, by the application of measures proposed by the committee of co-ordination sitting at Geneva.

In conclusion it expressed the desire to know the decision.

In reply to the general observations formulated by the Italian government, the French government must remark that having taken part in the deliberation at Geneva, it can bear witness to the constant care that the Council of the League of Nations, fully aware of the gravity of its responsibilities, took to work impartially by taking the greatest consideration of the legitimate interests of Italy.

The sentiments shown by all members of the Council toward a nation so intimately associated otherwise with all enterprises of international collaboration were the surest proofs of this friendly care.

France, particularly, was to feel all the more heavily the importance of obligations which she ardently wished she could conciliate with her attachment to bonds of Franco-Italian friendship.

Pact Breach Cited.

The government of the republic will limit itself, therefore, to recalling that last October 7 the delegates of all governments represented in the Council—excepting the Italian delegate—matching undisputed facts with the imperative provisions of the pact, had to declare that the Italian government had resorted to war in violation of Article XII.

Whatever its sentiments of friendship to Italy, it was not within the power of the French government to withhold from this declaration.

From a stiuation thus created would have resulted unavoidable consequences. To disregard obligations of the pact would have been to compromise seriously future possibilities of applying provisions which constitute the essential element of collective security assured members of the League.

Such is the imperative reason which, despite the thought it had for Franco-Italian relations and the sentiments which inspire them, and despite the blows which French economy will suffer, forbids the French government to put off application from the date already fixed as November 19 of the measures to which it has declared its participation.

"Duty to Seek Peace."

The government of the republic remains nonetheless agreed with other members of the League of Nations in considering that application of the rules of the pact, which by the terms of Article XVI carries obligatorily certain restrictive measures, morally imposes the duty on them, moreover, to seek as rapidly as possible a peaceful solution to the conflict under way.

The Italian government knows the French government has not neglected any effort in this direction, and that, strengthened by the encouragement given its action and that of the British government at the last meeting of the committee of co-ordination, it will persevere in this search.

While waiting for settlement of the conflict to end the measures prescribed by the pact, the French government wishes to affirm that none of them has toward Italy the character of a hostile act which the Italian government believes can be attributed to them.

Italy, which played in the founding of the League of Nations the eminent role that the Italian government recalls, cannot fail to recognize this truth.

That is the hope which the government of the republic feels it its duty to formulate. At the same time it renews its hope to see the hour hastened when the present conflict will end for the greatest advantage of the community of peoples and of international collaboration.

RamsayMacDonald Given Cabinet Post

Baldwin Also Creates Place for Malcolm MacDonald.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 22.—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, reshuffling his cabinet today as a result of the recent general elections, retained former Prime Minister Ramsay MacDoanald as lord president of the council and created a place for Malcolmn MacDonald, his son. Both were defeated in the election.

Unless Ramsay MacDonald is raised to the peerage, a seat will have to be found for him in the House of Commons, and it was assumed in political circles a seat would also be found for his son, through a by-election.

Lord Halifax, who has been secretary of war, was made lord privy seal, replacing the Marquess of Londonderry. Alfred Duff-Cooper, financial secretary to the treasury, was appointed war secretary.

Young MacDonald, who has been secretary for colonies, exchanged portfolios with J. H. Thomas, who has been secretary of Dominions.

Thus Duff-Cooper is the only newcomer to the cabinet, and the Marques of Londonderry the only minister not reappointed. King George has approved the reconstructed cabinet.

seek a peaceful solution of the conflict as quickly as possible, and promised France would "persevere in that search."

While awaiting a solution that will end the measures called for in the League pact, M. Laval said:

"The French government reaffirms that none of the measures has the hostile character which the Italian government might attribute to it."

As part of his avowed "perseverance" in seeking peace, the French premier today received Cerruti, the Papal Nuncio, Mgr. Luigi Maglione; Davaz Suad, the Turkish Ambassador, and Stefan Osusky, Minister from Czechoslovakia.

The Russian Ambassador, Vladimir P. Potemkin, completed the list of callers and, diplomatic sources said, expressed Soviet "concern" for the second time in the last few weeks over the talks of Adolf Hitler and Andre Francois-Poncet, the French Ambassador to the Reich.

Peace Plan Sought.

The last of these was held yesterday, and informed circles said France was seeking a "practical plan" for an understanding with Germany on the maintenance of European peace, but without much chance of getting it soon.

Hitler and the French government were said to be as far apart as ever on the Franco-Soviet mutual assistance pact and other matters following the conference at which Francois-Poncet reportedly told the Reichsfuehrer that the French Parliament is certain to ratify the Soviet accord.

It was understood, however, that M. Laval desired to strengthen his cabinet's position at home by showing that a rapprochement, guaranteeing France from a German attack, might be possible if the cabinet were spared from an imminent attack in the Chamber of Deputies.

But any Franco-German understanding will be discussed seriously only if Great Britain takes a lead in the negotiations, informed observers believed.

The French superior council on national defense, under the chairmanship of President Lebrun, met today to study technical angles of the recent agreement on aid to the British in the Mediterranean in case the latter's fleet is attacked.

Reprisals Due If U. S. Cuts Off Oil, Rome Says

Ickes' Appeal Stirs Talk; Officials View Possible Ban as 'Sanctions.'

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Nov. 22.—An embargo by the United States upon oil shipments to Italy would be "tantamount to following the lead of British imperialism," Italians close to the government said tonight.

Such a step, it was believed, would bring America in the eyes of Italy into the class of "sanctionist" nations and subject to economic reprisals.

A government spokesman said, however, Italy does not expect the United States to permit any actual "imposition of sanctions" upon oil. He explained that oil is not included on the list of war materials in the American neutrality resolution.

This reaction was to Secretary Ickes' appeal to the American oil industry to ban shipments to Italy. Italians pointed out that large American refineries have carried on trade with Italy for years and expressed confidence that only a clear-cut action by the Washington Government could paralyze this trade.

Serious Threat.

Fascists readily admitted that Ickes' move was a serious threat to their oil supply, vital to military operations in Africa.

1. She is trying to do without many imports.
2. Trade with non-sanction countries is being enlarged.
3. The nation is being urged and taught to live on its own resources.

Premier Mussolini has long sought to get an even balance of trade instead of the normal annual exports worth 5,000,000,000 lire and imports worth 7,500,000,000 lire.

He is quoted by friends as having said if sanctions had not come he would have been obliged to devise something similar to jolt the Italians into a new method of life and business.

Few Italians realized, said agricultural experts, that Italy imported many things she could grow herself. Meat and vegetables and oils were bought in large quantities from abroad when more of them could be produced here. Much coal could be replaced by cheap water-power electricity when industries modernize themselves.

Il Duce's pledge that Italy "will remember her friends and remember her enemies" appears to be taken seriously by the vast Fascist network. Many organizations have voted boycotts on all goods of all sanctionist countries.

Banks Break With Rome

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Nov. 22.—The Chase National and the National City banks and the Guaranty Trust Co., the three largest banking institutions here, discontinued all transactions in Italian exchange today after cabled inquiries failed to elicit from Rome a reply as to whether drafts upon their lire balances would be honored freely.

Earlier in the day the principal London banks had declined to quote or deal in lire on the ground that British deposits in Italy were not being released.

The action of the New York banks has caused no great inconvenience to business here, it is reported, because the current demand for Italian funds is comparatively light. Also, the supply is scarce except for checks upon balances owned by Italians. These are offered at about a cent discount because of Italy's restrictions on the flight of capital.

U. S. Hints Step To Halt Trade With Italy, Foe

close to the government asserted such action would be "tantamount to following the lead of British imperialism."

As the trade figures and the Shipping Board Bureau's action were made public, Italian Ambassador Augusto Rosso called on Secretary of State Cordell Hull and conferred with him for almost an hour. On leaving the conference the Ambassador declined to disclose the nature of his conversation, beyond stating outstanding questions between Italy and the United States had been discussed.

It was late in the day when Benito Mussolini's envoy emerged from Secretary Hull's office and comment regarding the visit was not forthcoming from the State Department. It is probable that he sought information regarding the American course of action and improbable that he left any protest with Secretary Hull.

Shipping Casualties.

The action taken by the Shipping Board Bureau was reported already to be bearing fruit, inasmuch as several vessels, one in New York and another at a Gulf port, have canceled plans for carrying oil to Italy.

The line of action embarked on by the Administration yesterday constituted the most stringent enforcement so far of its neutrality policy, proclaimed on October 5. On that occasion the President warned Americans against trading with either belligerent, except at their own risk and the meaning of that statement has been elaborated on in half a dozen subsequent statements from the President and Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

The latest of these came a week ago when Secretary Hull declared that trade with Italy or Ethiopia in such commodities as oil, copper, trucks, tractors, scrap iron and scrap steel "is directly contrary to the policy of this Government * * * as it is also contrary to the general spirit of the recent neutrality act."

This statement constituted the basis of the implied threat issued in letters mailed Thursday by the Shipping Board Bureau to its debtors. Signed by J. C. Peacock, director of the bureau, the letter made no direct threats, but cited the Government's policy as enunciated by Secretary Hull.

"In pursuance of the policy which has been set forth in recent statements by the President and Secretary of State," Peacock wrote, "I have been directed to call to the particular attention of all owners or operators of ships under mortgage to the Government the fact that the carrying of essential war materials, such as those mentioned in the statement of the Secretary of State of November 15 (cited above), destined for either of the belligerents, is distinctly contrary to the policy of the Government."

Results Expected.

Belief here is that owners and operators indebted in millions of dollars to the bureau on purchase and construction loans are not ready to treat lightly a policy of the Government. The reaction of these companies is expected to be similar to that expressed by Frank Huck, vice president of the American Black Diamond Lines.

"Naturally we are following the policy of the Government," he was quoted by the Associated Press as saying in New York. "It would be impossible not to. No shipments have been or are being made to Italy or Ethiopia that I know of. We're not taking any shipments with a bill of lading for either country."

Even though a shipping company has paid in full the interest and principal due on its loans, and thus would be beyond the immediate reach of the Government, it could not defy the Peacock letter with impunity, it was pointed out, because virtually all the American merchant marine is dependent on the Government bureau for the financing of future construction. The fear that its disregard of the President's wishes would be held against it at that time would deter it, it was argued.

Extension of the same policy to the railroads indebted to the RFC was believed to be the next logical step, should shipments to Italy continue to increase, as they did in October. Pressure through banks indebted to the RFC on defiant industrial enterprises was held not to be an entirely remote possibility in the enforcement of the program.

The total increase of the value of exports to Italy was not large, but there were substantial increases in the items which Secretary Hull a week ago in effect proscribed. Exports to Italy in October had a value of $6,821,366, as compared with $4,795,887 in September and $6,184,491 in October of last year. Commerce Department experts contend that the only fair comparison of export figures is between the same month of different years, since seasonal factors enter into shipments.

"War" Goods Data.

Thus, these experts gave the following values for exports to Italy of various material that might be used in war, for October of the year and 1934:

	1934	1935
Cotton, unmanufactured	$3,740,755	$3,423,987
Petroleum and products	337,015	1,066,625
Refined copper in ingots, bars, blocks and pigs	188,237	534,094
Iron and steel scrap	179,458	472,455
Automobiles, parts and accessories	44,476	14,407
Tractors and parts	15,662	9,390
Aircraft, engines and parts	4,081	200,919
Steel plates, sheets, etc.	46,822	6,368
External cylindrical grinding machines	9,304	33,893
Gear-cutting machines	8,460	12,170
Engine lathes	.....	44,134
Internal grinding machines	4,183	65,147
Nickel in all forms	16,564	11,132
To Italian Africa:
Rubber tires, tubes and casings	$7,655	$1,247
Tractors and parts	13,197	24,551
Automobiles, parts and accessories	21,702	68,723
Petroleum and products	36	118,126
Trailers	.....	118,980

The shipment of $200,919 of aircraft, engines and parts, the Department reported, took place prior to the President's proclamation on October 5. These articles were subjected to an embargo on that date.

The October shipment of petroleum to Italy was twice the monthly average for the first ten months of this year. This average had a value of $532,346. The monthly average for the first ten months last year was $519,354. The value of the monthly average copper shipment from January 1 to October 30 was $471,391, as compared with a monthly average of $239,812 in the same period of last year.

One of the most startling increases in exports is that of automobiles, parts and accessories to Italian Africa. The monthly average for the first ten months of this year had a value of $213,494, as compared with $6,608 in the same period last year. Thus automobile shipments to Italian Africa in Ooctober were smaller than in previous months of this year, a fact indicated by reports of manufacturers to the Nye munitions committee.

Sizable shipments of petroleum and products have been made to Italian Africa. The monthly average of such shipments from January 1 to October 30 had a value of $22,080—the October shipment was approximately five times larger—compared with $458 in the same period of last year.

The Commerce Department's report showed that shipments to Ethiopia had a negligible value. The October exports to that country were valued at $999, as compared with $559 in October, 1934. During the first ten months exports to Ethiopia had a value of $70,976, as compared with $16,623. The most substantial increase was in automobiles and their parts, from $7,630 to $41,990. Automobile shipments in October to Ethiopia had a value of $361, while rubber tires, tubes and casings valued at $115 were shipped.

Corpus Christi, Tex., Nov. 22 (AP). The Corpus Christi Crude Oil Co. announced today it would continue to ship oil to Italy and other foreign nations as long as no embargo is placed on the commodity by the United States.

Three Italian tankers sailed from port here this week with more than 100,000 barrels of oil for an undesignated Italian port.

It was reported the Corpus Christi company was negotiating a new contract with Italy for 1936 which will be an increase over the present contract.

Police Question Bride in Death Of Farm Youth

Girl Denies Victim Was Suitor; N. Y. Police Discard Suicide Theory.

By the Associated Press.

New City, N. Y., Nov. 22.—Rockland County authorities sifted conflicting rumors tonight of the friendship between Mary Swope Philpot, girl bride, and LeRoy Smith, 24, farm youth, who was found slain yesterday.

The girl denied that young Smith was her suitor.

"We were just friendly," police reported she said.

District Attorney George V. Dorsey said he was investigating a story that Frank Smith, 15-year-old brother of the dead man, had reported that LeRoy, three weeks ago, received a "threat."

Discard Suicide Theory.

Dorsey said the suicide theory had been eliminated.

An examination showed that although Smith's sweater and shirt had been punctured by a .32 caliber bullet which penetrated the heart, the leather jerkin on the body bore neither bullet hole nor powder burn.

The prosecutor based hopes of a posible clew on identification of fingerprints on a revolver found 25 to 30 feet from Smith's body, in a field about 100 yards from the colonial home of the girl.

No charges were filed in the case.

Questioned by county, State and New City police were the girl, her husband, his friend, Carl Stottlenyer, and Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Salaman, mother and stepfather of Mary.

Pursues Single Theory.

Dorsey pursued the theory that someone may have taken exception to Smith's attentions to the girl, inasmuch as she was married, though reported estranged from her 19-year-old husband.

The girl, descendant of old Hudson Valley stock, told him she had last seen Smith between 8:30 and 9 p. m. Saturday, when he dined at her home.

The prosecutor earlier said he wanted to question a young woman with whom Smith was said to have been keeping company.

Neighbors referred to the slain youth as the "Don Juan" of the community. The girl bride eloped last February with Philpot in Cincinnati. The elopement resulted in an annulment threat by the bride's mother, though court proceedings were not started.

tonight, ready to give him blood transfusions.

Killen had coached at Lake Charles for 12 years. He numbered among his former players two All-America stars—Don Zimmerman and Bill Banker, of Tulane—as well as Homer Robinson, All-Southern star, and Dick Watson and Pete Dalovisio, two members of Tulane's team this year.

Louis Guintard, captain of this year's team, said Clifford played tackle on the second team last year. After a game with Beaumont (Tex.) High School, Coach Killen told Clifford he had been caught breaking rules, and warned him "if it happens again you will get a spanking," Guintard said.

Clifford was caught again, Guintard said, and Killen dismissed him, but not until after three members of the team had seized him on the football field during practice and administered three lashes with a belt.

Clifford tried to conceal the whipping from his parents, but they noticed the marks on his back.

One student who witnessed the shooting said Killen approached Russell with his arm outstretched in friendly greeting, and Russell opened fire without a word. One bullet ricocheted along the floor and barely missed the janitor. Another hit a trophy cabinet. The third hit Killen, grazing his heart.

Murder in the Capital

By Karl Schriftgiesser

Who was the slayer of quiet Corinna Loring, almost on the eve of her bridal day?

As ace detectives seek to unravel this ghastly crime, The Washington Post has been delving into the histories of unsolved murders in and around the District.

Virginia McPherson, 23, with a life of youth and beauty ahead of her, was found dead in her apartment six years ago. Tongues wagged over what had happened to the strangled girl and about her horrible death, which Mr. Schriftgiesser tells about today.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

Anyone who makes a study of crime in the District of Columbia and vicinity is immediately struck by the strange fact that between September, 1929, and November of this year there have been five women who died violent deaths, tinged with an aura of mystery. Each of these women was young. Each was, in the minds of some, murdered. Of these five deaths within six years the facts were such that only one could have been a suicide.

In September, 1929, Virginia McPherson, 23, was found strangled to death in her rooms at the Park Lane Apartment House. A pajama cord had been knotted after being tightly drawn around her throat.

In April, 1930, Mary Baker was brutally slain by a man as yet unidentified by the police. Her story has been told here, as has the mysterious story of the cunning killing of Beulah Limerick, the nymph of the Anacostia flats, who was shot behind the ear by, as they say, a person or persons unknown.

No Holiday For Death.

The fourth female victim of murder was Evelyn Jordan, 23, who was found dying in the room of a photographer who had been held by police for three days during the hectic and futile investigation that followed the slaying of Beulah Limerick.

And then came the killing, just across the boundary line in Mount Rainier, Md., of Corinna Loring, 26, who was garroted to death two days before her wedding to Richard Tear.

But of all these cases perhaps the first remains the greatest mystery to many.

Who killed Virginia McPherson? And why?

Before her marriage, when she was Virginia Hurley, Virginia McPherson, was known as an attractive, vivacious, fun-loving girl, with plenty of young men at her beck and call. Robert A. McPherson married her and they lived at the Park Lane Apartments, where they were quite happy.

Wife Is Found Dead.

McPherson was a bank clerk, the son of Mrs. Robert A. McPherson, sr., confidential secretary to the then Secretary of War James W. Good. On September 14, young McPherson came to Mr. W. C. Ruff, manager of the apartment house, and said he had found his wife dead.

She had been strangled with her own pajama cord.

McPherson explained he had come back from a visit to his mother's home.

Mrs. McPherson's body was just inside the bedroom door. She was dressed only in the upper portion of her two-piece pajama suit. The belt from the lower part had been twisted five times around her neck and tied—in the back—with a surgical knot.

The medical authorities established the time of her death and McPherson proved that at that time he had been sleeping in his mother's home. When he made his horrifying discovery, he said, he threw a dress over his dead wife's bare legs.

Questioned, the young widower said Mrs. McPherson had made previous threats to end her life.

They questioned Manager Ruff, and he told how, when he entered the apartment upon being notified of the death, he had felt the weight of the body against the door. He said he had to move it in order to get into the room.

Police, as the reporters used to say, threw out their dragnet for suspects. Or at least for people they wanted for questioning.

A New York physician was the first questioned, but he proved he was in complete ignorance as to how the girl he once had wooed had come to her death.

A former Cornell student, Robert Allen, a private on the police force, was the patrolman on the beat in the neighborhood of the Park Lane. He made a preliminary investigation and attended the coroner's inquest.

Dissatisfied with the investigation, Allen made his own inquiries and reported, privately, that he found bloodstains in the bathroom and other evidence which indicated that Virginia had interrupted a bath to commit suicide and that, after strangling herself in the bathroom had walked into the bedroom to die!

Despite the suicide verdict, the case was reopened. Other witnesses were heard, who had not been called at the coroner's inquest. A taxi driver told of taking a male passenger to the apartment the night of the murder.

Witnesses were found who said they had heard screams coming from the McPherson rooms. Allen testified he had seen a man leaving the apartment.

No Evidence to Indict.

As a result of this new evidence McPherson was indicted for murder. Then it was discovered that one of the members of the grand jury, which had returned the indictment, had been ineligible and the indictment was quashed.

A police trial board found Allen guilty of insubordination and disrespect for his superior officers and he was dismissed from the force. More witnesses were heard, more testimony given.

The grand jury announced on November 21 that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the issuance of an indictment against anyone.

That ended the case.

Saw Corinna's Death Sedan, Two Declare

police had wound it and that it had stopped at 7:40.

Not until last night did Lieut. Itzel learn definitely that the watch was stopped at 9:20 when found. Peters explained that after picking it up, he shook it. It wouldn't start, he said, so he wound it. Then it started. It was about 7 p. m. that same night that he turned it over to Police Chief Eugene Plumer. When it stopped again at 7:40, Plumer also wound it only to have it stop at 9:05.

The reason it stopped in such a short space, according to Robert W. Hicks, District criminologist, was that some grit entered the works.

Crowds at Home.

A new flurry of excitement broke around the investigation of Corinna's murder late yesterday, and once again crowds gathered outside the Loring bungalow in Mount Rainier, Md.

They were drawn there when Lieut. Itzel paid a call on Mr. and Mrs. George Loring.

Lieut. Itzel, who was accompanied by Sergt. Leo Vogelsang, his new aid from Baltimore, said he did not talk to Mrs. Loring, but had her show him Corinna's personal correspondence.

While Itzel did not say so, it is understood he was looking for a "threat" letter from a spurned suitor. He did not find any.

Police are convinced that Corinna, in the days before she fell in love with Richard Tear, had an admirer her family knew nothing about. A neighbor has told of a man who, last spring, used to park his car about 150 feet from the Loring home and wait there until Corinna would join him.

But once Corinna met Tear, all other men apparently had no appeal for her. She was to have married Tear, 29-year-old attendant at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, two days after she disappeared the night of November 4.

It was reported last night the investigators had been given the name of a man who once courted Corinna and who recently was in "trouble" in New York.

Other Developments.

Other developments in the murder mystery yesterday follow:

Capt. Bernard W. Thompson, assistant chief of the Washington Detective Bureau, forwarded to Lieut. Itzel the name of a local cab driver who, according to Detective Arthur Fihelly, drove a "nervous" young man to the vicinity of the Loring home on the night Corinna disappeared.

Lieut. Itzel talked with the Rev. Robert Nevitt, pastor of the Mount Rainier Methodist Church, where Mrs. Loring went the same night.

Itzel also talked with neighbors, trying to find one who might have seen a man near the Loring home on the night of the murder.

A whisky bottle, into the neck of which had been pressed a pocket-size edition of the New Testament, was found on Saddleback Ridge.

Inside the Bible was written "Memory verse Romans 10:13." The verse referred to is, "For whosoever shall call on the Lord he will be saved."

Itzel exhibited interest when told a Washington cab chauffeur had driven a man to the vicinity of the Loring home the night Corinna disappeared. He has been counting on some such tip to lead to a "break" in the case.

There has been considerable speculation as to how Corinna ever got to Saddleback Ridge, lonely "Lovers' Lane" about a quarter of a mile from her home.

Knew Slayer, Is Belief.

For the most part, investigators have been working on the theory that the murderer knew Corinna and by a pretext lured her from her home. They have assumed, further, that he had an automobile.

Tear, the girl's fiance, has expressed the opinion that she never would have consented to walk to Saddleback Ridge unless the murderer had told a very convincing story about harm having come to one she loved.

If the man had an automobile, as most investigators have assumed, the tip about a nervous individual riding to the home in a taxicab then would be without value.

Two friends of Corinna went to Upper Marlboro last night to talk to Lieut. Itzel. They were E. O. Schweigert, a neighbor, who often drove Corinna to work, and Marie Long, a member of Corinna's Sunday school class. Both live in Mount Rainier.

Patient's Death At Sykesville Draws Inquiry

Resignation of F.B. Beacon From Hospital Board Accepted by Nice.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Nov. 22.—Gov. Harry W. Nice said tonight reports that a patient died after being subdued by attendants at the Springfield State Hospital at Sykesville were being investigated.

Dr. George H. Preston, commissioner of mental hygiene, who has been operating the hospital, said that the institution had had its own investigation. This resulted in a decision that the death was unavoidable, he said.

The Governor said he wanted to learn whether the death was due to the man's treatment. The victim, who came from Baltimore, died Thursday morning. He was subdued by three guards Tuesday night, Dr. Preston said.

The body of the man has been returned to his family, members of which declined to discuss the matter, other than to say they intended to take no action in the case.

Gov. Nice also said that one member of the board of managers of the hospital had resigned since the State Survey Commission criticized the institution about six weeks ago. This resignation, offered by Frank B. Beasman, has been accepted, the Governor said.

Dr. Preston said the patient attacked one attendant with a shoe, and then assaulted another attendant. A third was called and the patient was put back to bed. He did not complain of feeling ill, but fell over dead Thursday, Dr. Preston said.

Sanctions against Italy were not invoked by a war-weary world until every possible effort to persuade Mussolini to abide by the bare essentials of treaty obligations had been exhausted. Now that sanctions are in force it is of the greatest importance to civilization that their pressure should bring a negotiated and legal settlement of the dispute with a minimum of friction and delay. Otherwise the validity of the contractual basis of all treaties will continue to remain in doubt and the threat of absolute anarchy in the relations of nations will prolong its shadow across the world.

Essentially for this reason the efforts of the Administration to make the neutrality policy mean what it says will meet with complete national support. It is true, as Secretary Ickes points out, that the Government has no authority to halt shipments of oil, as a basic material of modern war, to Italy. But producers and exporters who see the magnitude of the issues involved will not need more than the reminder of the petroleum administrator to fall in line behind the Government's policy. As now pointed out, there are other ways in which pressure could be invoked with complete legality, if that should be necessary to insure effective neutrality in the Italo-Ethiopian war.

The failure of the present co-operative effort for peace would raise international complications too destructive to contemplate. More than 40 nations, at considerable cost to themselves, have united to apply penalties to a self-defined aggressor. Under such circumstances it would be intolerable if the United States, seeking to circumscribe and shorten a particularly flagrant war, should indirectly combat the peace-preservation efforts of the League members. Such a course would have no relation whatsoever to real neutrality. It would be merely assisting the aggressor to break to pieces such effective peace machinery as exists.

It is to be remembered, also, that the policy of the Administration in this issue was really mapped out for it by its predecessors in office. Secretary Hull is not merely following the mandate of Congress, but also the lines clearly defined in the past by the Kellogg Pact and the Stimson Doctrine.

The first of these sought to outlaw aggressive war. The second aimed to give this nominal outlawry some reality by laying down the principle of non-recognition of illegal gains. Abstention from supplying basic munitions to the aggressor is implicitly called for by neutrality. But it is also a logical and indeed inevitable consequence of the whole trend of our foreign policy during the past decade.

Seeds Of Destruction.

It is no mere coincidence that rioting broke out in four widely separated cities of the Old World on Thursday. Each disturbance may be linked with major policies pursued by dictatorial governments. The outbreaks in Cairo appear to be repercussions of the Italo-Ethiopian War, and the same influence may be detected in the stoning of British police and the destruction of property by rioting Arabs in Palestine. In Warsaw and Budapest the disturbances are more closely associated with Germany's medieval attack upon the Jews.

One of the most emphatic lessons of modern history is that war in one part of the world is likely to promote upheavals in many other parts. Especially is this true when the only excuse for a war of aggression is economic conquest. Such a policy on the part of one major country makes every defenseless people apprehensive. They would not be human if they reacted otherwise.

Moreover, all dissatisfied groups are likely to take advantage of a period of international jitters to air their own grievances and, if possible, to force adjustments in their own interests. War undermines morale and warps the judgment of the human mind more than any other known influence. In this day and age treaties cannot be trampled under foot without weakening the confidence and stability of all human society. And when restraints are thus broken down, incidents and grievances of a relatively minor and readily soluble character are likely to lead to violent upheavals. As the World Alliance For International Friendship Through the Churches recently pointed out, "we must ponder deeply the effect of the legacy of hatred which will be left by this generation and the hostilities that will materialize for future generations."

When Mussolini sent his legions to East Africa on the theory that his conquest was merely of local concern he actually threatened the peace of the world quite as much as the independence of Ethiopia. In part the consequences of that imperialistic move have already been manifested. Its effects will be nonetheless devastating because they are widely scattered and because the seeds of hatred and unrest are just beginning to sprout.

The Witch Burners.

Far from disturbing, it should reassure intelligent parents to learn from the report of the executive committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations that Washington school children of the upper grades have been learning something about communism in their studies.

But if facts have been distorted so as to give them either too bright or too dark a picture of conditions in the Nation which embraces one-seventh of the globe, that is indeed disgraceful—as disgraceful as it would be to distort facts about the New Deal, about Fascism or any other controversial subject. The federation's memorandum suggests that such distortion—in favor of the Russian form of government—does occur in the books used as texts and more so in the books recommended for optional reading.

The final judgment as to the seriousness of these alleged distortions is to come from a special committee of the Board of Education, that group of citizens selected to supervise the education of District children. This committee of three faces a difficult task, for there probably has been more ghastly exaggeration, both pro and con, in discussions of present-day Russia than on any other single subject. However, to warrant elimination of the criticized books, something more than vague allegations that they are by "communistic" writers must be provided.

On the subject of distortion, incidentally, may be noted the case of William Henry Chamberlain, one of the "recommended" authors who has been denounced. Mr. Chamberlain, a well-known American newspaper correspondent, has written so critically of the Communist experiment that he is no longer allowed in Russia.

It is sometimes argued that some students of high school age have so little critical faculty that it is safest not to let them consider controversial subjects. In a few cases this may be so. But those few are unfortunately the very ones who will never otherwise acquire any sense of judgment; who will grow up with nothing but prejudice to guide them, either to hate vehemently or worship unquestioningly the fancies of their own circumscribed minds. Such shallowness will tend to make them the witch burners of the next generation—those whose pitiful fear of the unknown impels them to frenzied mass efforts to drag superior intelligences down to their own primitive level.

This moronic element passed the "monkey law" in Tennessee. Its fellows, more recently, burned the classics of Germany. And now the same mob psychology is invoked to urge a school taboo on all books treating of Russia or communism.

The affair, of course, has many interesting angles still to be disclosed. What, for instance, is to be done about the encyclopedias? Will it be enough merely to eliminate from the schools those volumes treating the letters "C" and "R"?

A Wise Decision.

Attorney General Cummings has advised district attorneys not to institute criminal proceedings against utilities that fail to register under the holding company act. It is not the purpose of the Government, he says, "to harass the industry with a needless multiplicity of suits." Neither is it desirable, as he pointed out, to embarrass the Government by forcing a great number of companies to bring injunction suits to protect themselves against penalties for nominal non-compliance with the law.

An amicable arrangement, such as that proposed, does not for a moment mean that the Government is prepared to yield in face of concerted opposition. The utilities have felt compelled to take obstructive action in order to determine the status of the law, and they have done so in entirely legitimate fashion. The Government proposes, therefore, to institute civil proceedings against one or more large companies failing to register, with a view to seeking a speedy test of the validity of the act from the Supreme Court.

The Cummings announcement indicates that the suits will be of a constructive and friendly nature, brought without intention of intimidating the companies. That is the wise way to handle constitutional questions of this sort.

Inadequate Transportation.

The inadequacies of Washington's transportation system have been apparent for months. Complaints have been numerous and persistent. Surveys by engineers for the Public Utilities Commission have revealed conditions that ought not to be tolerated in a city with the size and importance of the National Capital. It is not surprising, therefore, that the P. U. C. has decided to crystallize these complaints at a public hearing and then follow whatever course appears most desirable to eliminate the deficiencies.

Since the commission pointed out to the Capital Transit Co. the shortcomings of its service there has been time to inaugurate improvements. It may be presumed that the commission would not have made public its present letter if fully comprehensive efforts to remove the causes of complaints had been made. Now the case is before the bar of public opinion as well as the P. U. C., with an urgent demand for greatly improved service. The company still faces the necessity of eliminating delay, overcrowding and insanitary conditions and in addition it faces a barrage of criticism.

It is unfortunate that the P. U. C. has been forced to take such vigorous action at a time when truly co-operative effort is needed to ease the traffic problem. The important thing, however, is to make certain that the public is adequately served even though pressure may be essential to that end.

What's In A Party Label?

Disfranchised Washington is interested in balloting of any sort. But there was a novelty in the election of a "little Congress" at George Washington University which attracts special notice. In setting up their imitation legislature the students selected delegates under party titles that are not used in American politics. Their Congress will consist of the Right, the Center and the Left.

Since the George Washington Union is to discuss public issues confronting the United States, why was its political alignment worked out on the European pattern? Undoubtedly, the answer would be that Right, Center and Left parties afford the most logical division of voters on the basis of instinctive psychological reactions to current issues. Compared with this effective division of human temperament, our existing two-party system appears crude. For both major parties include all shades of political opinion, and while the Republicans are usually more conservative than the Democrats, that generality does not always hold true by any means.

From the theoretical point of view the advantages of the English three-party system may be multiplied to great length. It gives more accurate representation to individual views; it encourages greater continuity of policy by each political group; it relieves each party of rebellious members that tend to frustrate its collective aims, and it encourages discrimination on the part of voters. In actual practice, however, we see the British electorate favoring a two-party system. The recent elections have virtually eliminated the Center, or Liberal Party as a political force. The tendency is to entrust power to the hands of either the Conservatives or the Labor Party, so that the responsibility of office and opposition alike can be clearly focused.

In this country the tendency to eliminate third party groups is still more pronounced. Despite the schism in Republican ranks, and the widening breach between two wings of the Democratic Party, voters persistently cling to the major party labels. For only by so doing can they hope to fasten the onus for incompetent government upon one single group, or effectively reward an administration for excellent service.

The three-party system should serve admirably for the discussion of national issues in a student union, for there the question of responsible administration will not arise. In actual politics, however, the translation of platforms and policies into workable programs is the foremost problem. Such a task cannot be entrusted to fluctuating combinations of antagonistic political groups with any assurance of efficient performance. If it is the intention of the G. W. students to encourage adoption of the three-party system, therefore, that is likely to be the least useful aspect of their most interesting political experiment.

Reading For Fun.

There is something unpleasantly arbitrary about a Children's Book Week with the motto "Reading for Fun." Is it not simply another indication of the patronizing attitude of grownups toward children's literature? High pressure salesmanship, subtly enticing blurbs and a period set aside for the purpose will never make any child take a book to its heart. This is accomplished by something as unorthodox and intangible as the eternal appeal of pirates, Indians and talking animals.

However, it is interesting to pore over the advertisements and reflect on the evolution of subjects which has taken place in books for the young reader. One book explains "how motion pictures are made." Another is "packed with thrilling, authentic information about modern police." Still a third tells "how to become an explorer—temperament, equipment, etc." A stabbing nostalgia is felt for the days when any boy could be an explorer who owned a jackknife and a dog. And what are little girls reading, now that mermaids, knights and princesses seem to have been plowed under?

Modern machinery and the men who make and master it are of course quite as heroic and inspiring as the fanciful conquerors of beanstalks and giants. At the same time, one can only hope that the latest type of Prince Charming will not entirely usurp the place of the old. This is a choice, however, that must be left entirely to the children. Else the phrase, "reading for fun," would be utterly meaningless.

A biologist says man is the only animal that prepares for the future. Squirrels storing up nuts for winter must think they're playing "Button, button, who's got the button?"

If the cartoonists would have our Uncle Sam appear clean-shaven this might help dispel the too prevalent idea that he's Santa Claus.

A Montana man recently underwent an operation for the removal of a silver dollar he swallowed. We've known creditors who could have made him cough it up.

Meaningless Party Labels.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

President Roosevelt has suggested that the citizens of Nebraska should continue Senator Norris in the upper house of Congress for the remainder of his days. This is an extraordinary unprecedented statement coming from the head of the Democratic Party concerning a lifelong Republican. This liberal attitude on the part of President Roosevelt indicates how the inner walls of partisan partition have broken down during the past few decades.

The terms Republican and Democrat do not now stand for any definite body of clearly differentiated doctrine as they did 40 years ago. It is impossible to determine a present-day statesman's political views by his party designation. Senator Borah, a possible candidate for the Presidency on the Republican ticket, is in closer sympathy with the views of Franklin D. Roosevelt than with those of Herbert Hoover. Senator Hiram Johnson, Republican, and Senator Wagner, Democrat, voted together on practically every item of the "New Deal" program in Congress against Senator Hastings and Senator Tydings, their respective co-partisans.

At one time the Republican Party stood for human rights as embodied in the Civil War amendments to the Constitution, a strong centralized government to enforce these rights and a protective tariff as a means of fostering national prosperity. At the same time the Democratic Party espoused the doctrine of States' rights, local sovereignty and free trade. But of late these doctrines and beliefs have become so confused and transposed between the parties that no clear line of demarcation is possible.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has translated his liberal principles into a practical program. Public men today, regardless of their previous political persuasion, are characterized by their attitude toward the "New Deal"—whether they are for it or against it. Roosevelt's policies have established the only decisive issues in the active political life of today. In the approaching Presidential campaign of 1936 the voters will not be asked to uphold or oppose the Republican or Democratic Party in the former sense of these terms, but to sustain or to defeat the "New Deal." Not only partisan but sectional lines have been obliterated. The East, the South and the West will not be motivated in this election by their traditional party allegiances, but the battle will rage around the issue which Roosevelt has formulated.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has posited a political principle which frustrates all erstwhile party affiliation and tradition. KELLY MILLER.

The Two-Job Man.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The one who signs himself "Jack Straw" fails to make his defense of the two-job man and the "sundowners" impressive by referring to those who are unable to find work to do, either in or out of the Government service, as being of the class that "are speeding about in installment 'Lizzies,' spending their time in pool rooms, speakeasies, etc." The Apostle Peter, nearing the end of his days, urged his followers to add to their faith "brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity," and herein possibly is a lesson that Jack Straw and others like him might study with profit.

These are trying days for many among us. Many capable, upright, deserving citizens, who do not own "Lizzies" and who do not frequent pool rooms, are searching in vain for the job which would permit them not particularly, as Jack Straw sets forth in his justification of the two-job man, to "have John's tonsils removed, or Mary's teeth straightened, or to give Betty Lou piano lessons," but to procure a morsel of decent food for their own, John's and Mary's and Betty Lou's little stomachs.

The contemplation is not a pleasant one, I imagine, for citizens without work to be confronted daily with a neighbor who not only has a comfortable Government berth, but also a job, either full time or part time, in private employment. The private job very often is at smaller pay than a single-job man could afford to accept in decency.

I maintain that the two-job man is chiseling at the expense of Uncle Sam. He is attempting to serve two masters and is doing justice by neither. The really aggravating circumstance, of course, is the fact that the Government authorities stand for it.

Here we are trying to get 10,000,000 unemployed persons back to work—to a self-supporting and self-respecting basis. But of what avail are shorter hours of employment when such a course only makes it possible for the labor vandals to hold the jobs of two individuals instead of one? S. Q. DEAL.

Seek And Ye Shall Find.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your editorial comment on combined action by V. F. W. and A. L. for passage of the "veterans' compensation bill" nullifies your comments on the action taken by both these organizations in combating the "red influence."

You know that the "bonus army" incident and treatment accorded veterans today are the main arguments used by reds in their "anti-war service" campaign. Antagonism for veterans' legislation by bankers, manufacturers and some newspapers who made "hay" while the veterans furnished the "sunshine" at one-dollar-a-day, places in the hands of the reds and pacifists a weapon that no editorial can overcome. In this instance their contention is a fact and the younger generation seeks facts.

Reduced To Its Essence.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Why should there be such a commotion over the question of the teaching of communism in the public schools? The matter is at bottom a very simple one.

Most people would probably agree to the fairness of the following statement:

(a) The pertinent legislative act is evidently intended to prevent the spread of communism.

(b) Therefore the "teaching" of communism in the language of the act must mean nothing less and nothing more than imparting knowledge about it in a sense favorable to it.

(c) From this it follows that if the persons affected do not impart that knowledge in that way they can sign the declaration required by Mr. McCarl with impunity and a clear conscience.

Theater Ventilation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I read with much interest the letter published in Mr. Bell's columns concerning theater ventilation. I was in the balcony of a Washington theater last Thursday evening and the same uncomfortable condition prevailed as that mentioned in the letter.

Mr. Bell asks the question, "How many people keep their homes just right?" As I see it that question has no bearing on the ventilation of public places of amusement.

I doubt if there is a home in Washington where the temperature reaches 90 and stays there for a couple of hours at this time of year. L. DOUGLAS.

The Case Of The AAA.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The brief filed by the Government lawyers in the AAA case now pending before the Supreme Court indicates the desperate straits to which they have been driven to sustain the constitutionality of that provision of the act imposing the processing "tax." They rest their contention upon the proposition that Congress has the right to levy taxes without limit for "the general welfare" under Section 8, Clause 1, of Article I of the U. S. Constitution.

The Supreme Court has, however, frequently held that the term, "provide for the common defense and general welfare," contains no grant of power whatsoever, but is a mere expression of the ends and the purposes to be effected by the preceding power of taxation, and is a limitation on the taxing power of the United States, and that only. It has also been held by said court that the preamble of the Constitution, which contains a "general welfare" clause, grants no power of legislation at all.

Even though it should be conceded that the "general welfare" clause is a grant to Congress of unlimited power of taxation the exercise of the power must be for the general welfare of the United States Government. Can it be said that the processing tax, which taxes one class of people for the exclusive benefit of another class, namely the farmer, is a tax imposed for the general welfare of the United States Government? To state the question is to answer it in the negative. In fact it is nothing more than the exercise of legislative power to rob one class of taxpayers for the benefit of another.

It is not to be assumed that the Government attorneys are ignorant of the law and the decisions of the court on this question, and if this be true their position is indefensible, and indicates an insincerity that is unworthy of them as representatives of the noble profession of the law.

Furthermore, should their contention be sustained the power of Congress to tax will be without limit. It can then pre-empt all sources of taxation to the detriment of the States, and the business interests of the country will be at its mercy, and any business, whether interstate or intrastate, can at any time be taxed out of existence, for the power to tax is the power to destroy, when its unlimited existence is once admitted, as was said by the great Chief Justice Marshall.

The Post Impressionist

Alas, Poor British Museum!

Post Office, Saturday.

POSSIBLY there's no occult connection between the two events—but it is a queer coincidence that, the minute a British electorate ousts Ramsay MacDonald, the British Museum ousts the Cervetri Sarcophagus. Warmly as we congratulate the electorate, our felicitations to the Museum are positively febrile.

For years and years that sarcophagus had been almost the most popular exhibit in the Museum's galleries of Greek and Roman remains—and quite the most conspicuous. School children were compelled to study it. Annually thousands of tourists were persuaded to admire. Backed by the Museum trustees and the Museum's world-renowned experts, guides and guidebooks proclaimed the Cervetri Sarcophagus a triumph of early Etruscan art.

* * * *

In case you are fortunate enough never to have been one of those child-laborers or enticed tourists, permit us to tell you that this venerable treasure portrayed, above bas-reliefs of warriors in action, an Etruscan gentleman in repose. He half sat, half reclined, upon a meager matress, one elbow supported by a cushion which always struck us as the spoils of a Victorian war. The toes of his left foot were turned up, emblematic of dissolution. The palm of his right hand was coquettishly extended toward a pajamad lady—symbolic of Death. He was strikingly, yet inexpensively, attired in a short, pointed beard.

Somewhere along in the eighteen hundreds' sixties, a certain Pietro Pennelli, arrived at Rome with a cart full of formidable fragments which he declared he had dug up at Cervetri. In the studio of that famous dealer Castellani, Pennelli re-assembled these pieces of stone into the work of art we are now considering.

Well, Castellani bought it. His entire collection was, in turn, bought by the British Museum. And that sarcophagus was reckoned among the biggest bargains.

The British purchase occurred in 1873. About '74, the serpent-tongue of slander wagged a little:

Italian epigraphist Fabretti said the inscription on the tomb was mostly bad Etruscan, the correct portion having been copied from a certain gold brooch in the Louvre. Dealer Castelani pooh-poohed the accusation. Immediately the Museum's eminent Sir Charles Newton pooh-poohed it, too. . . .

Twelve months passed. One of the Louvre's oldest formatores, a Signor Enriquo Pennelli, was rumored to be bragging that he had made and broken the Cervetri Sarcophagus, buried it to lend it an air of antiquity and then had had his brother Pietro sell the bits. Tush-tush! Sir Charles asked Enriquo whether he was a cheat—and got Enriquo's own word for it that he wasn't.

So, for more than 50 years, that Etruscan gentleman continued to die in his uncomfortable pose at the great Museum, while Mistress Death kept urging him forward. Savants approved. Guides declaimed. Children and tourists gave grudging praise.

The Cervetri Sarcophagus provided one of the most closely observed and longest deaths on record.

To be sure, the inscription-detail continued to excite causticity—in obscure quarters. And some pessimists pointed out that the reliefs on the sides, echoing Attic vase-paintings of 560 B. C., didn't harmonize with the passengers on the upper deck.

Nevertheless, the ensemble stopped most experts short of the suspicion of modernism. The Post-Impressionist had to admit that few except ancient Etruscans ever simpered so fatuously as this Etruscan and his attendant goddess. Besides, all those doubts arose from outside. The Museum was satisfied. And who could successfully gainsay the British Museum? . . .

Alas, at long last, treason has raised her hideous head within those scholastic walls. There is no explanation; you can't expect the British Museum to explain anything. Yet there does come a report that some new Museum hirelings—young bloods of 70 or so—have opened the gates to the enemy. And there does come the terse announcement:

"The so-called Cervetri Sarcophagus in the Terracotta Room has been condemned by the experts in the department and its removal from public exhibition sanctioned by the Trustees."

We always hated that cinerarium. And yet—what an end to fifty-odd years of British immobility! At one blow, moreover, the Cervetri Sarcophagus and Ramsey MacDonald . . .

Somehow, now that the thing has happened which we so ardently desired, a certain sadness tempers the post-impressionistic triumph. We don't want to believe that our old Etruscan has finally finished dying and that Mr. MacDonald has politically perished with him. We shall erect a defense mechanism and believe that they have merely

And silently stolen away.

Fair Enough

Eat, Baby, Eat.

Madrid, Nov. 22.

EVERY American newspaper takes an interest in the care and feeding, education and physical training of the young. Many of them publish, along with football scores and Wall street closing prices, the advice of famous journalistic physicians or medico-journalists. This is a public service. The young mother should be told how much spinach and oatmeal to feed her baby. When the child is a little older she should be told that nail biting is a bad habit.

Finally, there's the matter of the young American's schooling. The American child should be hardened in the competition of combative sports and taught the rudiments of mathematics and chemistry, so that 15 years from now the baby of today will be able to die as obstreperously as possible in the next war to end war.

• • • •

THERE'S a great difference of opinion as to the reason why people are born. In Italy Germany, Russia and Japan today they are born to kill as many other people as they can, and die if necessary. In Germany, under Adolf Hitler, the nation is propagating the idea that Christianity is a racial weakness because Christians are afraid of the wrath of an angry God.

Therefore, the Nazi German child is encouraged to believe that if he should die in war his soul will go to some beautiful realm where all is honor and glory and the war-killed German is a heavenly ward committeeman with authority to kick the souls of Jews, Americans, Frenchmen, Englishmen, Italians and Russians off the sidewalks. This is no exaggeration. This belief is in Nazi books, which are plagiarized from the belief of the Japanese.

Nazi Germany has no substantiated God, although one of the great ecclesiasts of the new German state recently announced that Adolf Hitler, the former house painter, was God and the Holy Ghost. This reduced the case for the young German mother to the proposition that the new baby at her breast or toddling in the back yard could come to no more beautiful end in this world than to die in battle with a chunk of scrap iron in his belly and with the sacred name of Adolf Hitler on his lips. Or he might die just as magnificently in a mudhole in the field with his lungs eaten out by a whiff of gas. The noblest purpose, however, is to die for Adolf Hitler, head of the new Germany, and the next noblest achievement is to risk this death and live.

IN ITALY, for 14 years, Benito Mussolini has harangued Italians to breed more children on the ground that there were too few Italians in the world. A year ago he began to agitate the claim that Italy had too many people and therefore would have to expand, which is a diplomatic euphemism for conquering or stealing. So, for the last year in Italy, the new children who were bred in the last eight or ten years have been marching in parades, carrying miniature rifles on their shoulders and shouting in their baby voices, "Doo-chay, doo-chay," like Yale sophomores at a football game howling, "Brek-ek-ek-co-ek-co-ek-co-ax."

Now, after all, it's no great feat to breed a child, although religion has always invested the practice with a beautiful, sanctifying emotion, which has ennobled propagation in certain countries. The danger is that in a world which has never been able to make up its mind just who is good or what is noble American mothers will make a terrible mistake and the United States will miss the boat. American mothers ordinarily do not raise their babies with the idea that they will delight to hear one happy day in the future that their little boy's head has been blown off by a shell or their little girl has been spattered by a bomb from an aeroplane. They are a sentimental lot, the Americans, like the British and the French, and this sentiment seems to be a dangerous weakness. Possibly, under the political circumstances existing in the world, they should regard the children in whom they take such delight and for whose future they make such naive plans as so many riflemen, so many pilots, so many female auxiliaries for the next war.

• • • •

AND for all that anyone can prove to the contrary, Adolf Hitler may be God and the Holy Ghost as the German ecclesiastic said, although there is competition just now in the person of Father Divine, the colored Bible flogger of Harlem, whose followers insist with some plausibility that Father Divine is God and that Adolph Hitler is not even an apostle.

There is, of course, some waste in war. The French, for example, are fighting for the rights of democracy of small nations such as Alsace and Lorraine, and the same German colonies executed from 1,600 to 2,500 of their own soldiers before their own firing squads, many of them by a regrettable error.

This is one of the possibilities that the French girl must take into consideration when she is going through the inconvenience of having a baby.

But considering the state of the world and the human race, it's not a bad idea to raise children, if children there must be, to be healthy, big and bright. The purpose of this will be obvious. So, baby, eat your spinach and oatmeal.

Berlin Conversations Of Hitler And French Ambassador Bring To Fore Struggle Of Gauls To Repress Teuton On Continent.

By Andre Vulliet.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

WHILE the general attention is focused on the Ethiopian war, the Berlin conversations of Chancellor Hitler and French Ambassador Francois Poncet brings again to the fore the vital question of a Franco-German rapprochement. At a time when Europe is anxious lest the Italo-Abyssinian conflict should spread over to the continent and set the Old World ablaze again, it is a general feeling that such fears would be greatly allayed—not to say totally discarded—should France and Germany set aside their old rivalry and bury the hatchet.

With the Franco-German antagonism settled once and for all there seems to be little doubt that the major cause of a widespread war in Europe would be scotched and such conflicts as would break out could be more easily kept within local limits.

The rapprochement between the two traditional enemies has often been talked of since the World War. At first it was regarded as a bold proposition. Briand and Stresemann worked for it, more or less actively. Premier Laval, while he was Prime Minister in 1930, went to Berlin to talk it over with Chancellor Bruening. More recently, war veterans from both countries have exchanged friendly words and Reichsfuehrer Hitler has repeatedly stated to foreign correspondents that Germany has given up Alsace Lorraine, regained the Saar and wants nothing from France except a right to live.

TAKING Hitler's spoken word, there are many, both in Germany and France, who think that, there being no "direct" issue between their two countries, it should be possible for them to come to terms. Yet even among those who argue this most enthusiastically, there seems to be a striking lack of confidence. The reason seems to be that the problem now confronting France and Germany is not one that can be settled by direct negotiations.

Willy-nilly, most of the clauses of the Peace Treaty, except the territorial ones, have been abolished. In respect to the evacuation of the Rhineland, the reparation payments, the Saar territory, the armament restrictions, Germany has recovered the full equality of her status. What is now at stake between France and Germany has little to do with the material liquidation of the World War. It is the question of their relative positions in Europe. After ten centuries of struggle, it looks as though their respective grandeurs irretrievably oppose each other. France cannot let Germany's full territorial development go undisturbed without relatively weakening her own position and it is Hitler's opinion, as expressed in "Mein Kampf" (of which the two millionth copy was sold six months ago) that "so long as there is a strong France in Europe, Germany will not be able to develop as she wishes and as she must."

TRUE enough, the evolution of continental Europe since the middle ages has been marked by a constant rivalry between the Gaul and the Teuton, in which France reached the climax of her supremacy during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries and Germany reached hers in the second half of the nineteenth century.

At the origin, the Holy German Empire was a vast sprawling construction in comparison with the small kindom of France. There even was a German empire long before a French kindom. But, thanks to its hereditary prerogative, France was able to attain a unity in a few hundred years, while the inability of the German emperors ever to get rid of the elective system was a source of chaos and it made it impossible for the German states to reach their unity until after the middle of the nineteenth century.

For centuries and centuries, with inferior forces and relatively few wars, the French kings managed to take advantage of the German chaos and did everything they could to preserve it. As a counselor of Henry II put it, in the sixteenth century, they interfered "underhand so as to keep the German affairs in as much difficulty as possible." It looks as though France realized that against the prolific German races her best weapon was her unity and their weakest point was their multiformity. The gravest danger for France was a united Germany because, due to her size, she was bound to become "greater" than France and crush it.

WITH this in mind, France diplomacy achieved its masterpiece with the treaties of Westphalia, signed in 1648, according to which the German states were dismembered in more than 2,000 parts. What sounds incredible, though, is that this treaty was welcomed by the Germans, as it pleased their sense of local independence. The French kings saw to it that this independence was preserved and, for nearly 150 years, the European peace was interrupted only by minor conflicts.

At first, the danger spot for France was in Vienna, which was regarded as the center from where the strings of the German empire were pulled. But in the course of the eighteenth century, the danger moved northward, in eastern Europe, where a new kingdom was born, which was to develop into the most formidable stumbling block in the path of French supremacy.

On January 18, 1701, Frederic Hohenzollern managed to have himself crowned as King of Prussia at Koenigsberg. From then on, as Stuart Mill wrote it, "Germany became a permanent possibility of annexation for Prussia." Exactly 127 years later, on January 18, 1871, a descendent of the first Hohenzollern was proclaimed emperor of Germany at Versailles, in the very palace of the kings of France. German unity had been achieved.

• • • •

SECURE against France, the German empire also felt definitely free from any obligations toward Austria. The consequence was to turn Austria's political aims toward eastern or southeastern Europe, that is, against the Slavs. Another consequence was the pre-war Franco-Russian alliance, which pleased France because she felt it would protect her from Germany and suited Russia because she hoped it would serve her purposes against Austria.

• • • •

Today, France is again confronted with the same sort of alternative. But the issue is new in that the flawless unity of Nazi Germany has turned it into a solid mass of 65,000,000 people as compared with a French popuplation of but 42,000,000. Moreover, all the new German myths about the "elected race" and the like sound none too reassuring to France, since they help perfect the German unity. The more they spread, the more France fears the danger of the Nazi dream of a "Great Germany" coming true.

• • • •

WHAT is so dramatic in France's position is that, to live, she must not take decision for the immediate future, but must try to visualize the Old Continent 10, 20 or 50 years hence.

She may tie up with the Slavs in a new effort to encircle Germany and fetter the latter's desire—or need—for expansion. She may reverse her traditional policy and make friends with Berlin hoping that should the latter's policy expand eastward and be at grips with the Slavs, it would weaken rather than strengthen Germany. Whatever France chooses to do, however, she will never lose sight of the fact that her vital instinct is opposed to that of Germany.

All the French want from their Nazi neighbors is that they do not expand into a prominent position in Europe. All the Germans ask from the French is the right to expand. That is the only real issue. That is why so few people can see a real solution to it.

Sahara Revisited?

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

A Warning.

THE public prints, ever alert to guard against any encroachments upon the rights of the citizenry, revealed not long since that an active lobby was determindedly and expensively at work upon plans to make Washington once again the pride and joy of the prohibitionists. It was shown, if you recall, that members of Congress, now in their own bailiwicks for the purpose of kissing babies and otherwise placating their constituents, were being petitioned by this little group of wilful men and women to do something about the dreadfully liquorish condition of the National Capital. As one who recalls the awful gin served in the speakeasy era hereabouts, I feel that it is in the line of a public duty not to let this matter drop.

In fact, it seems to many observers who conscientiously devote their energies to keeping up on such affairs that in the matter of drinking the laws are already stringent enough. It is, of course, a simple matter to walk into any drug store and purchase whatever your fancy calls for, but this involves thereafter considerable annoyance and labor. One must then transport the bottle to some place, such as one's home, and then go through all the messy rigamarole of being one's own bartender and this procedure robs drinking of many of its more pleasurable aspects. It makes work of what should either be a rite or a casual happening.

OF course, one may step into a restaurant and order anything from a Martini to a life-giving Ward Eight. But one must drink it, in too many instances, in the depressing atmosphere of steaming frankfurters and beneath the din of clanking pots and pans and porters removing the last half hour's collection of coffee mugs. To the aesthetically inclined such conditions savor of the barbaric. It is only in the hotels that one may drink in comfort and at leisure, savoring one's drink and engaging in conversation with a friend in tones not calculated to cut through the raucous cry of waitresses shouting up the dumb waiter to a deaf cook.

The cocktail rooms alone are civilized, where one may sink into a chair, order his elixir, and be reasonably sure getting it within the next half-hour. But the cocktail rooms are scattered over a wide front and with a few notable exceptions are difficult of access to the busy man and then they are apt to be crowded with lady shoppers and debutantes, both of whom, to many, negate the pleasures of drinking. There are extremely few places where one may step in for a quick one of a dreary afternoon. In the resturants one has to wait an interminable length of time to have it brought by some flighty wench who places it sloppily before the customer as if it were but a lowly cup of coffee and not what it really is, a gift from the gods. In the cocktail rooms the service is quicker, but more expensive.

IN neither restaurant nor cocktail room is the disenfranchised citizen of Washington allowed that common courtesy which, in other Eastern cities, is the inalienable right of all who are free, white and 21. I refer to the daily intimate chat with the bartender, whose praise has been sung by more eloquent tongues than mine. A philosopher and friend, the bartender is a gentleman to cultivate. For many dreary months we Washingtonians were deprived of even seeing the dispenser of our drinks, nor even the bottle whence they came. Thankfully those men in Congress who do our voting for us eventually said that the bartender might be seen, but still he may not be spoken to. He stands, in solitary grandeur, behind his tiny bar, a lonely man.

Were those wilful men and women who would shut the bars, smash all the liquor stores, and turn the drug stores back to the lowly business of selling books and banana splits, to come under the kindly influence of an experienced bartender's conversation, which expertly touches any topic under the sun, they would be surprised at what a mellow place this wicked world can be. It would do them good and they would walk out of the bar room with their chins up and their hearts for the first time filled with the milk of human kindness.

BUT such a happening is too much to expect. They will go their sour ways, their hearts crabbed and their faces long, intent upon returning an otherwise pleasant city to the degraded level of the prohibition era. They will make criminals out of bartenders, most of whom haven't an evil thought in them if left to the pursuit of their essentially honest profession. They would make the procurement of a drink an intolerable nuisance. But they would make Washington a Model City.

I doubt if they will succeed in their nefarious undertaking, but the prohibitionist is a slippery fellow and must be watched. If they could put prohibition over on a nation that had the vote, they might do anything to a voteless city. It's a remote possibility, but one of such a dire nature that it must be guarded against.

8 Rice Mills Renew Fight On AAA Tax

Federal Claims Answered in Supreme Court Injunction Plea.

By the Associated Press.

Again assailing constitutionality of the AAA amendments, eight Southern rice millers renewed in the Supreme Court yesterday their petition for an injunction against processing taxes.

Thursday Solicitor General Reed asked the court to dismiss the millers' petition because the old policy on taxes was "to pay first and litigate later."

Answering this the millers yesterday said denial of their petition would mean they "should never be allowed to present to any court the grave constitutional questions involved in these suits."

The Louisana Federal district and Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans previously denied the injunctions. The millers said yesterday they were not attempting to "skip the circuit court of appeals for the simple purpose of procuring an early decision."

Protecting Rights.

"On the contrary, it is a case where petitioners seek only to protect their constitutional rights and to do it in the only manner which is open to them.

"If the position here taken by the Government be sustained it means that in the future the Government will have no difficulty in assessing, collecting and retaining unconstitutional taxes.

"All that would be necessary would be to withdraw the Government's consent to be sued, forbid injunctive relief in the courts, and proceed to the collection of the taxes by the summary procedure afforded under the code."

A Supreme Court ruling on the injunction is expected Monday. A previous attempt by a Kansas milling company to obtain an injunction without action in the circuit court was denied.

Cases Held Different.

However, the Southern rice millers said that case differed from theirs in that the Kansas company was protected by an injunction pending its appeal.

The Government brief said millers could eliminate threatened suits, penalties and damages by merely paying the tax.

The AAA amendments which provide no processor may recover AAA taxes paid unless he proves they were not "passed on" also were attacked as unconstitutional by the millers.

They said the Government had refused an invitation to show how this could be proved.

"If all the scholars who have been studying for these many years the question of 'passing on' of taxes have been unable to devise any method of factually proving or disproving the theory, it is hardly to be expected that these petitioners will be able to devise a method overnight."

Roosevelt Has Day of Freedom, Visiting, Swimming in Georgia

The President Takes Ride in Auto, Has Talk With Reporters.

By the Associated Press.

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 22.—President Roosevelt indulged in the freedom seldom permitted a President as he motored about this old neighborhood today.

Keeping his regular engagement with newspapermen for the semi-weekly interview, he stopped by the roadside on his way for a plunge in the outdoor swimming pool, but there was no particular news.

Asked about the Navy personnel for the coming year, he estimated that about 96,000 of the 100,000 men authorized by Congress would be enlisted, but he refrained from more definite figures. The London naval limitations conference is about to convene.

It was a carefree day for the President. After attention to mail following breakfast, he drove his car to the Warm Springs Foundation and took a swim in the outdoor pool.

This afternoon he motored about the community, with a visit to the farm as one of the first points of call.

The Government budget for the next fiscal year is nearing completion and Mr. Roosevelt has arranged for a talk Monday with Budget Director Bell and Chairman Buchanan of the House Appropriations Committee to talk over this.

Before leaving Washington the President remarked he had a blue pencil working overtime on the budget, but there was no hint on the figures to be recommended to Congress. There is little prospect of announcement of these before Congress meets in January.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown

Friday Morning Music Club presents the Washington String Quartet (Milton Schwartz, Paul Brightenberg, George Wargo and Howard Mitchell) in Barker Hall. Program: Quartet in C major, Op. 54, No. 2 (Haydn); "The Pixy Ring" (Harry Waldo Warner); Quartet in G major, Op. 18, No. 2 (Beethoven).

Beginning its golden jubilee season, the Friday Morning Music Club honored a much younger organization by choosing that sterling foursome, the Washington String Quartet, to play the first program for the members and guests. The mettle of these sincere young musicians has been tested many times and it always rings true. Their readings are distinguished by a fine blend of pure intonations, technical accuracy, and clear exposition of the music they essay. Moreover, their playing has that stimulating quality of vitality which bespeaks a delicate sense of musical values.

The C major quartet of Haydn is one of the set of three brilliant works that marks the termination of a stage in the composer's development in that particular form. It was a great favorite with Joachim, who was an excellent judge in such matters. The opening movement is the most symphonic that Haydn wrote up to that time, broad in design and strong in texture.

In the slow movement, a sombre, almost sepulchral, melody muses on the transience of life, while above it the first violin sings a counterpoint florid and seemingly as free as the song of a lark. The minuetto contains a remarkable trio section, and the concluding adagio is richly lyrical.

Mr. Warner is well remembered in this country as the viola player of the London String Quartet, now unfortunately disbanded. As a composer, he has to his credit several very interesting works for strings, of which "The Pixy Ring" is the lightest and most fantastic. He has let it be known that this imaginative suite was the outcome of a holiday in north Cornwall, and that the five movements were written in as many days.

"Moonbeams," the prologue to the fairy doings, is a shimmering web of tones descriptive of nocturnal quietude, establishing a dreamy mood which ends with the striking of 12 in a pizzicato octave on the viola. In "Toad Stools" the gnomes leap and play their pranks, and in "Tinkling Bluebells" the elves come forth to join in the merriment.

Humor reigns in "Pixy-Laden," where the music tells of a none too sober wayfarer, trolling a lusty stave as he wanders homeward, who is suddenly beset by the mischievous fairy people. They mock his song, swarm over him, tweak his hair and befuddle him until he falls to the ground and slumbers, the violoncello parodying his weary snores. Thereupon, the pixies resume their revels in "The Ring Dance."

The G major quartet of Beethoven brought the auditors back from fantasy to the realities of pure music. It represents that phase when Beethoven had not yet discarded the influence of Haydn and Mozart, when he was mastering the medium and beginning to express his inner self. The theme of the slow movement is one of the loveliest cantabiles of his early period.

New Treaties Urged to Curb Drug Traffic

Smuggling Bases Increase in Latin America, Says U. S. Official.

By the Associated Press.

A hint that new international overtures may be needed to curb the opium traffic appeared yesterday in the annual report of H. J. Anslinger, commissioner of narcotics.

Asserting "increasing use" of Central American nations and the West Indies as smuggling bases had caused "no little concern to the American Government," the report added:

"Except in the case of Nicaragua and British Honduras, requests of the American Government that individual cases be investigated • • • have hitherto met with no response, although all of the nations concerned are parties" to international conventions of 1912 and 1931.

China Drugs Entering.

Anslinger also said morphine and heroin manufactured in China, Dairen and Manchuria are "entering the United States in considerable quantities."

In response to a question, the commissioner explained that by Manchuria he referred to cities located in Manchukuo, but since the Japanese-controlled independent state is not recognized by this Government, its name must not be mentioned in a Government report.

Anslinger expressed the belief that the number of addicts in the United States had not increased. He said arrangements for the direct exchange of information between the United States and 23 other governments were operating effectively in combatting the narcotics evil. Special mention was made of co-operation given by Germany, Canada, Egypt, France, Great Britain and Holland.

The report said further:

"There is reason to believe that prepared opium is being smuggled into all areas by post, concealed in newspapers."

Most on East Coast.

Heaviest arrivals of crude opium were reported "apparently in the Atlantic Coast area, although small quantities were seized in the north central and Pacific Coast areas." The largest seizures of prepared opium were in Hawaii and the Philippines. The 1934 seizures showed a decrease of about 49 per cent over 1933.

Anslinger said there was reason to believe cocaine "has been regularly smuggled from Japan to the Pacific Coast for some time past." The quantity seized in 1934 showed a drop of 5 per cent, however.

The commissioner said the illicit traffic in codeine has "increased to a scale which demands notice."

"Up to the present time," he said, "this traffic has been mostly supplied from Canada, and is heaviest in the area surrounding Buffalo, N. Y."

The report said all available information "indicates a tendency on the part of illicit traffickers to rely to an increasing extent on the Far East for supplies not only of prepared opium, but also of morphine, heroin and even cocaine.

U. S. Modifies Rule On Use of Airways

By the Associated Press.

Army and Navy private planes may fly over commercial routes in bad weather, after all, if they comply with strict regulations.

Following a wave of protests from private fliers, the Commerce Department yesterday modified its flat ban of November 1.

Private and service planes now may use the commercial lines and radio-beacon facilities, if equipped with blind flying equipment and two-way radio, if the pilots are properly trained, and if they report time of departure, where bound and proposed altitude to control stations, at the point of departure.

Otherwise, they still must obey the previous order to stay at least 25 miles from the center line of commercial airway radio beams and 25 miles from commercial airports.

U. S. to Open Steel 'Collusion' Inquiry

By the Associated Press.

The Trade Commission will start immediately to study whether there has been collusion among American steel companies in bidding on material for public works projects.

This announcement yesterday by the commission followed a statement by Secretary Ickes alleging there was "prima facie evidence of collusion" in two instances. One was in bids on steel for the Triborough Bridge in New York and the other for the ocean terminal at Morehead City, N. C.

The Trade Commission, at the President's request, will inquire into not only charges of collusion but charges that German steel makers, who bid low on the two projects, are dumping steel upon the market through a subsidy.

Job Plan, New Sidewalks Up In Montgomery

State Director Talks With County Board on Status of Relief Workers.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post.
1111 Oak Ave., Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone Shepherd 2363.

Complying with requests from civic organizations in western Montgomery County, County Commissioner Robert D. Hagner, of Bethesda, yesterday announced that sidewalks would be constructed adjacent to the new Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School. Hagner said the funds would come from his suburban district fund.

Plans call for 2,000 feet of sidewalk on the south side of the East-West highway, from Maple avenue to the high school and extension of the sidewalk on the north side to the school.

Efforts are being made to qualify county relief employes who have been given the work during the past summer, for positions under the Works Progress Administration, Harry Greenstein, State director, told the county welfare board yesterday in Rockville.

Mr. Greenstein met with the board, the county commissioners and the county's delegation in the State Legislature to consider the county W. P. A. winter program. A ruling by Administrator Harry L. Hopkins limits the program to persons who have been on relief from May 31 to November 1.

The State board was represented at the meeting by Mr. Greenstein, Sidney Hollander, William Galvin and Mrs. Isabelle Carter, regional director. Miss Lavinia Engle, chairman of the board, presided over the meeting.

Mrs. Fannie Rogers, 118 Chestnut avenue, Takoma Park, suffered a fractured hip, last night, when she slipped on a rug in her home. She was taken to the Washington Sanitarium.

Fusion employes of the county met in the courthouse in Rockville, yesterday to "exchange views and discuss future policies." The meeting followed a secret conference of the three Fusion county commissioners to consider the letter written by Democratic Commissioner Richard H. Lansdale this week, in which the Fusion record was scathingly denounced. Frank H. Karn, president of the board, said the letter probably would not be answered

Edward Peter, counsel for the board, said the employes' meeting evinced considerable enthusiasm for continuation of the Fusion movement, despite differences concerning the possibility of defeating the Democratic organization in a party primary or by means of a straight Republican ticket in the general election in 1938.

The Fusion commissioners—President Karn, Charles E. King and Paul M. Coughlan—declined to discuss the meeting, asserting it was an interparty matter.

Rudolph Neal, colored, was found guilty of burglary and larceny in Montgomery County Circuit Court yesterday, on the first of two charges of entering homes in Chevy Chase. Sentence was withheld by Judges Charles W. Woodward and Arthur D. Willard.

Court Forest Glen, Catholic Daughters of America, will hold initiation of officers at 3 p. m. tomorrow in St. Michael's Catholic Church, Silver Spring, Md. They will be assisted by officers of Court Our Lady of Lourdes, of Bethesda. State officers and members of courts from Marlboro, Gaithersburg and Bethesda have been invited to attend. Miss Alice Watts, grand regent, is assisted by Mrs. Florence Brennan, Mrs. Marie Victory, Mrs. Margaret Barrett and Miss Marie Culver.

A resolution urging the board of education to repair the road leading into the school and the parking space for automobiles before the bad weather was adopted by the Parent-Teacher Association of the Montgomery Blair Senior High School, Silver Spring, Md. The sum of $50 was allotted to buy furnishings for the school library. The association appropriated $35 for athletic equipment for girls. It was announced that a hearing on the rezoning of commercial property adjacent the school will be held December 16 before the county commissioners.

Woodside Park Civic Association will hold a silver tea tomorrow at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Blakeslee, Highland drive, Woodside Park, Md., from 5 to 7 p. m. The committee includes Mrs. Charles W. Hopkins, Mrs. M. K. Armstrong, Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Warren Selzer.

"At the point of greatest activity fountains were pouring out lava along a quarter-mile crack to a height of 50 feet.

"The fumes were heavy and increasing activity was noted in Mokuaweoweo."

Hilo was threatened once before—in 1881. A stream crept within a mile of the city. Islanders like to recall that Princess Ruth of the Hawaiian royal house stood before the oncoming flood and called upon Pele, the volcano goddess. The lava flow stopped.

The lava began bursting through the west slope of Mauna Loa about 6:35 o'clock last night (12:05 a. m. today, Eastern standard time), about 18 hours after a moderate earthquake. It was followed by a small tidal wave.

From two old cones, 10,000 and 11,000 feet up, the melted rock poured. The glowing lava reddened the sky. It was visible in Honolulu, more than 200 miles distant.

"The whole ridge of Mauna Loa is breaking into fire," reported Radio Operator Sherborn Smiddy, 40 miles away. "A dozen fountains are shooting into the air."

From the 9,000-foot level of Mauna Kea, another mountain 40 miles north of Manua Loa, Alfred Pestena, a CCC camp cook, said he counted five lava rivers last night and six fountains still were spouting lava this morning. He estimated the streams each were a mile wide.

The island of Hawaii, with many active craters, has experienced countless eruptions. Only once in recorded history has lava destroyed a village. In 1926, Hoopulos, a fishing village, was wiped out by Mauna Loa's eruption. It was evacuated before the lava arrived.

"The flow of lava died down somewhat after dawn today, leaving a black-crusted wasteland," the cook, Pestena, said in impressions of the scene which he wrote for the Associated Press.

"From this point 9,000 feet up the side of Mauna Kea, adjacent peak, I can see six fountains shooting fire into the air but with less intensity than last night, when a vivid drama was written in fire against the black sky.

"I counted five flows last night etching a red line along the rolling surface of a plateau. One was proceeding toward Hilo.

"The tremendous activity has halted now and I saw only splotches of her on the peak.

"During the first half-hour last night we were unable to see the eruption because of fog that overhung the peak. This was dispelled and we saw a fiery trail.

"I estimated that it started at 12,-000 feet elevation and streaked 2,000 feet down the north side of Mauna Loa.

"Gradually the river of fire branched until there were five streams running in all directions rapidly down the steep slopes. A dozen fountains shot flames into the air, lighting the countryside.

"I could see white heat and movement of lava. It was the most spectacular sight of my life."

Arlingtonians To Urge Utility To Extend Lines

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

The special committee of the Arlington County Civic Federation headed by I. C. Buchanan today will confer with Dr. William McClellan, president of the Potomac Electric Light and Power Co., and its vice president, A. G. Neal, to renew requests that the company extend its service into Arlington County. The conference will be held at 10:30 this morning.

Attention will be called to the petition now in the hands of the company containing the names of more than 3,300 citizens of the county asking that they extend their lines into Arlington County.

Other members of the committee who will accompany the chairman are Monroe H. Stockett, Percy Crittenden, Mrs. Alice Semones, George Damm, Horace Woodward and Arthur Orr.

Installation of a modern street lighting system was begun yesterday through the business section of Clarendon along the Wilson boulevard. A survey is being made by engineers of the General Electric Co. looking to a change in the county-wide system.

The Clarendon Business Men's Association will urge the county board to speed improvements on county roads in order that the cross-country bus system can be put in operation by the Washington, Maryland & Virginia Coach Co.

The company was given permission by the State Corporation Commission to operate the line, but Leon Arnold, president, says it is impossible to operate until the roads are improved.

Addressing the Parent-Teacher Association of the Washington-Lee High School last night, Dr. Ivan Booker, director of research of the National Educational Association, declared the health of the student has much to do with failure in studies.

To prevent this, he said, parents should see that their children never go to school unless in good health and that care should be taken to see that they have proper exercise and regular hours of rest.

Dr. Booker said if parents did not agree with methods used in the school they should not speak of it in the presence of their children, but should go to the school and discuss the matter with school officials.

The association voted to change its meeting night from the third Thursday to the third Tuesday of each month.

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the Arlington Fire Department and the department will sponsor a benefit card and bingo party tonight in the auditorium of the Patrick Henry School.

Although the population of Arlington County has nearly doubled in the past ten years, the number of deaths from tuberculosis has been cut in half, Mrs. N. R. Davis, county nurse, said last night.

Mrs. Davis points out that funds from the sale of Christmas seals are used in the county for preventive and educational work, support of chest clinics, supervision of active cases of the disease and tuberculin tests and X-ray examinations for children, in an appeal to support the sale of seals this year as in the past.

Linden Shenk, of Cherrydale, has been elected to the board of directors of the Arlington Kiwanis Club filling the vacancy left by Frank Rowe, who has been elected secretary.

Funeral services for Mrs. Annie A. Merchant, 69, who died Thursday night at her home at 814 North Emerson street, Ballston, will be conducted at C. J. Ives funeral chapel in Clarendon tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. by the Rev. W. D. Kean, pastor of the Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Georgetown. Burial will be in Lovettsville, Va.

Mrs. Merchant leaves one son, Charles T. Merchant, of Ballston.

Van Horn Gets 3-Year Term As Bigamist

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

George M. Van Horn, who received widespread publicity last July when he married Miss Rose Wallace, of Washington, on horseback at Memorial Circle, on the Mount Vernon Memorial Boulevard, Alexandria, has been sentenced by Judge William P. Woolls, in the corporation court of Alexandria, to three years in prison on a charge of bigamy. Van Horn pleaded guilty Thursday.

Van Horn, Miss Wallace and the entire wedding party were on horseback, with the exception of the officiating minister, the Rev. Pierce S. Ellis, of the First Baptist Church, Alexandria. The published pictures and accounts of the unusual ceremony attracted the first wife, Mrs. Ethel Mae Nagle Van Horn, of Baltimore, who revealed she had married Van Horn in 1934 after he was divorced from his first wife.

Levi C. Whiting was also charged with bigamy, in the same court, but after his testimony that he had been assured by a lawyer in Baltimore that a divorce had been granted, he was given a suspended sentence of three years.

Windell Joyner and John Wilson, colored C. C. C. boys, entered a plea of guilty of participating in a shooting last September in which four colored men were wounded. They were given a year and half in the State Penitentiary.

Three men—James Williams, Leo Norman and Jesse Jones—who pleaded guilty to stealing shirts from the Emergency Sewing Center, were given one year and a day each in the penitentiary.

The Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, through the manager, Martin E. Greene, has placed petitions in Edgar Warfield, Peoples and Timberman's drug stores seeking signatures from patrons of the Alexandria postoffice to have a door cut in the Prince street side of the city postoffice.

The new postoffice building, on the southeast corner of Prince and Washington streets, has only one entrance, in the center of the building on the Washington street side, with the mailing slots placed almost at the St. Asaph street end of the building, causing many unnecessary steps for those approaching the building from the eastern end of the city. Complaints started as the building was being erected, but these petitions to the Postoffice Department are the first definite steps of protest.

Take these three simple steps to Better Control of Colds

1. To Help Build RESISTANCE to Colds
Live normally—avoid excesses. Eat simple food and keep elimination regular. Drink plenty of water. Take some exercise daily—outdoors preferably. Get plenty of rest and sleep. (During the colds season, gargle night and morning with Vicks Voratone Antiseptic, especially designed for safe daily use to aid in defense against infection which may enter through the mouth.)

2. To Help PREVENT Many Colds

At the first warning sniffle or sneeze, use Vicks Va-tro-nol—just a few drops up each nostril. Va-tro-nol is especially designed for the nose and upper throat—where most colds start. Used in time, Va-tro-nol helps to prevent many colds—and to throw off head colds in the early stages.

3. To Help END a Cold Sooner

If a cold has developed, or strikes without warning, rub throat and chest at bedtime with Vicks VapoRub. VapoRub acts (1) By stimulation through the skin like a poultice or plaster; (2) By inhalation of its penetrating medicated vapors, direct to inflamed air-passages. Through the night, this combined vapor-poultice action loosens phlegm, soothes irritation, helps break congestion.

These three steps form the basis of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds—a practical home guide to fewer and shorter colds. Developed by Vicks Chemists and Medical Consultants; tested in extensive clinics by practicing physicians; further proved in everyday home use by millions. Full description of the Plan in each Vicks package—or write for details of Plan and trial samples of Vick Colds-Control Aids. Address: Vicks, 108 Milton Street, Greensboro, N. C.

Heaven on a Hundred.

Pay day dawns bright and happy;
We grab that pay with glee;
Our dress is not so snappy,
A new one's "five," you see.

The street car gets a dollar,
A lunch book takes two more;
To stop that fearful holler,
Sixteen pays up the store.

Our dentist asks for seven;
Ten keeps the lease alive.
But isn't pay day heaven—
I've still left one whole "five!"

Popovicis Entertain In Honor of Perazics

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Secretary of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Popovici entertained yesterday afternoon at a cocktail party in their apartment at the Westchester in honor of the new Secretary of the Legation of Yugoslavia and Mme. Perazic, who have recently come to Washington. Mr. Perazic was attached to the legation some four years ago, and since then had been serving as Consul General in Montreal. Now, with his bride, he has returned to the Capital and they are making their home in the Massachusetts avenue residence of Mrs. Rushmore Patterson, which they have leased for the winter.

Yesterday afternoon, Mme. Popovici, one of the beauties of the Diplomatic Corps, wore a frock of deep mahogany brown crepe fashioned with an ankle-length skirt and wide, flowing sleeves.

Mme. Perazic was in smart black a suit trimmed with silver fox, and a tiny hat of black antelope with two long, curving feathers.

Many Guests at Event.

The apartment of the Popovicis is inviting, with pale green tinted walls and many interesting hangings and pictures of distinguished friends. In the dining room there was a bowl of punch and a buffet of appetizers.

Among the guests were Commander and Mrs. Ellis Stone, the latter known to her readers as Grace Zaring Stone. She wore a black gown trimmed with Persian lamb, and a Russian turban trimmed with the same fur.

The Minister of Greece, Mr. Demetrios Sicilianos, was there, accompanied by the Counselor of the Legation, Mr. Nicholas Lely; the retiring First Secretary of the Legation of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Broz, with their daughter, Miss Gladys Broz, saying farewell to many of their friends, for they sail next week to return to Prague.

Capt. and Mrs. John P. Jackson were there, as was Mrs. Frederic D. McKenney, in smart black, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. McKenney Mallan, and her son-in-law and daughter, Commander and Mrs. A. W. Dunn.

Envoys in Attendance.

Indian Chutney Of Fine Quality Available Here

Rare Treat Is Provided in Recipe Brought From Old World.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IT'S THESE BRISK cool days that do things to our appetite. We have rosy visions of a roasted turkey, plum pudding and chestnut dressing. We smack our lips over golden brown pancakes swimming in butter and syrup. And other little delicascies tempt us strongly. Chutney, for one. What a finish chutney gives cold meats! What spice and variety it brings to the simple stew! And what melt-in-the-1mouth cocktail sandwiches you can make of a chutney cream cheese mixture! And what chutney can do for that left over turkey!

It isn't just every day though that you find really good chutney. In fact, it isn't one out of a hundred persons who can make it so that it has that certain something. But we know a person who can. She got her recipe years ago in India and brought it to this country only to discover she had a treasure. Everyone who tasted her product raved about it. Such was the demand that she had to put it up in quantities for sale. Now it is available in her own home, and also in several grocery stores here.

If you are looking for a means for making canapes or hors d'oeuvres that are delightfully different then take our advice and try the chutney mixed with cream cheese, and spread on crackers.

If you want to add a touch that will bring wholehearted acclaim to your Thanksgiving banquet, then do have a side dish of this real Indian chutney.

Our gifted chutney-maker also turns out delicious candied grapefruit peel in all colors. This makes an attractive gift, and is ideal and pretty, too, to serve at bridge parties or after dinner.

A Display of Sachets.

LIKE TINY boudoir pillows are the sachets arrayed on a counter in an F street shop. They are dainty things that will add a fragrant touch to one's lingerie drawer, or do their share toward dressing up the chaise longue in your boudoir.

They are covered in soft silks and trimmed with ribbons or cords in contrasting colors and rows of fine lace.

Their price, only 50 cents.

Collars Accent Youth.

BLONDES, brunettes and redheads, young and old, stout and thin, short women and tall ones, all can trust to a perky white collar to become them as few things can.

Last year's black woolen, this year's red crepe, almost any simple frock in your wardrobe is freshened by an attractive white collar.

Perhaps lots of you would like to invest in a collar that has not only a plus degree of chic but has also the faculty of suiting any neckline? If so, see those with a Buster Brownish air to them, featured in a local store. These are made of a crisp white pique and finished off with narrow bands of ribbon and large bows of wider ribbon in front.

Such collars accentuate your youth, or if you're past the youthful line, they take ten years from your age.

Salt and Pepper Shakers.

THERE'S JUST one word, and it's "quaint," that describes the salt and pepper shaker group shown in a downtown store. They're a shiny silver pair with a little silver tray. All three pieces for only 50 cents.

Nearby on the same counter you'll find another group made of that attractive "bump glass." These are ideally suited to old-fashioned tables and china that's patterned after another century. They have the nontarnishable shaker tops. Fifty-nine cents a pair.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Mother of Seven Tells Need of Warm Clothing to Keep Them in School.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have been a long time making up my mind to write to you, because I felt this problem of mine was too much to ask anyone to help us solve. But the need grows more real each day, and we must do something about it. We have taken The Post for seven years and I enjoy the woman's page very much, especially your column.

Our problem is this: We have seven children—two older girls of 13 and 15; two boys of 8 and 12, and three younger girls of 6, 9 and 11. During the past three years, owing to the depression, our circumstances have become so reduced that I have been compelled to leave home and take a job as maid of all work in a home in our community. My husband is still farming, but in a very small way, owing to shortage of money for farming supplies.

* * * *

My wages are small, exactly $3.50 a week, but considered a good wage in our community, and would be for a person with only herself to support. But with all my hard work and long hours, it is impossible for us to earn enough to clothe the children properly and keep them in school, as the cost of living is so high it takes all our earnings to buy food and shelter.

We are very anxious to keep the children in school regularly as they are all making good grades. The two eldest attend a country high school, and the younger ones go to the public school. But I am continuously worried for fear they will have to stay away from school in cold weather because we are unable to get them heavier coats, shoes, stockings and other needed articles of clothing.

* * * *

Now, to get to the point: Some time in September you printed a letter in your column signed, "Georgetown Reader." The writer spoke of having articles of used clothing she wished to give to some organization and she also spoke of some of her friends who wanted to do likewise. I have been wondering if, some way, through your column, I could be put in touch with her, and others like her, who would let me send them postage or money to cover express charges for mailing or shipping me some old clothing any time they wished, if this isn't too much to ask. We do not have a car at this time.

* * * *

Miss Haworth, I do hope you can help us. But if this is not a proper letter for your column, please disregard it as we do not wish to be annoying nor to impose on anyone's good nature. But we are in need and I felt you might be able to help us. If you print this letter, please sign me

RURAL READER.

State Aid Available.

DEAR RURAL READER: Unfortunately, I do not have the name and address of the correspondent who signed herself "Georgetown Reader." However, I have brought your problem to the attention of Mr. Harry Greenstein, State administrator of relief for Maryland. I talked with him by telephone in his office in the Rouse Building, 20 Hopkins place, Baltimore, Md. Mr. Greenstein said he has recently made an appropriation of $75,000 to provide winter clothing not only for needy school children in Maryland, but also for men who are going on WPA work. A letter to him, marked "personal," stating the facts in this case will result in an immediate investigation of the circumstances and in provision for such relief as is necessary for keeping your children in school, he said.

* * * *

In some school districts, live-wire Parent-Teacher Associations see that no child stays away from school for want of adequate clothing. This may be true in your locality. Had you thought of taking your problem to the children's teachers or principals? Miss Lydia Eiker, executive secretary of the Prince Georges County welfare board, is another person well qualified to advise and help you in meeting this emergency. She has assured me of her willingness to cooperate.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

By Malvina Lindsay.
Woman's Page Editor.

MRS. NELLE BROOKE STULL, of Elyria, Ohio, promoter of the widely known Widows and Widowers Club, has been holding a match-making session in New York much to the delight of the town wits. Of course, nothing in America is so funny as getting married and the marriage is doubly funny if the participants are a little bald or fat. Mrs. Stull's club has thus become a sort of national joke. And yet her project despite its ludicrous aspects has its points.

* * * *

For one thing, it is refreshingly open and above board. It doesn't masquerade as a French class, a literary circle or a ping pong club. Its members are frankly out after husbands and wives—even if they have to pay $25 a head for them. Its women members don't go around boasting of how many suitors are virtually hounding them to the altar and its men members don't have to maintain the pose of elusive foxes.

* * * *

To think of a man or woman saying frankly, "I want to get married" and then going about it by direct action instead of the conventional fan dance approach may seem a little crass to many. But it at least has the virtue of honesty. It suggests that something might be gained if the whole matrimonial problem were approached in a less hypocritical manner.

SO-CALLED refined society does far too little to help its young—or even its middle-aged and elderly—meet their mating problems. Parents, churches and social agencies all have been remiss in this respect. Match-making mothers exist largely in fiction. It would be a better thing if there were more of them in real life. The average mother is eager to help her daughters and sons to educations, careers anr jobs but she rarely concerns herself in any practical, intelligent and understanding way in helping them find satisfactory life partners. She would be shocked at the crude suggestion that such an activity were a part of her job.

* * * *

Churches and community centers have been forthright in their zeal to save the heathen and to promote handball, but only by the most left-handed methods have they sought to help young people achieve their marriage goals. If they have become "advanced" enough to establish clubs for the lonely or courting parlors they have surrounded these projects by such an amount of indirection, shush-shushing and chaperonage as to make them ineffectual. When they have held social events they have not made any aggressive effort to round up eligible young men, or to reduce the feminine-masculine social ratio from its usual 5 to 1 basis.

* * * *

As a result the highest types of young women, those who would make the best wives and mothers, have received virtually no concrete aid in achieving husbands worthy of them. And society has been the sufferer.

MRS. STULL'S matrimonial club has another commendable feature in that it frankly encourages the middle-aged to pursue matrimony. Youth too long has arrogantly assumed that it had a copyright on romance, that puppy love was the only bona fide grande passion. It has too often by its foolish ridicule and selfish tyranny prevented its elders from living their own lives. Youthful possessiveness quite as much as parental possessiveness has condemned too many persons to loneliness and fifth wheel existences.

* * * *

Widows and widowers should be encouraged to remarry if for no other reason than to eliminate the two-generation household, one of the worst existing sources of domestic unhappiness. Often the middle aged and elderly may find in the companionship of their own generations far greater freedom and peace of mind than in the households of their sons and daughters. And at the same time they may free their children from the responsibility of their care and entertainment.

* * * *

Mail order matrimony and commercial widows and widowers clubs may be a little obvious and tawdry in their methods. But a little more of the frank attitude they represent would help lift the pursuit of matrimony from a bootlegging enterprise to a legitimate profession.

Office Girls Warned of Red Nails

Red finger nails, an inharmonious wardrobe and an inclination toward office gossip are three of the chief things that cost stenographers their jobs, says Miss Jessie H. Samson, office manager for a large New York law firm. Miss Samson, addressing the Transcription Supervisors Association, said red finger nails distracted the dictator's thought because they were conspicuous. She gave the following dont's for stenographers:

Don't look around the room during the dictator's pauses. Quietly relax and be inconspicuous.

Don't use a pencil or pen that scratches.

Don't comment during a pause in the dictation.

Don't shiver or sneeze perceptibly.

Personnel directors, accordington to Miss Samson, agree that personal appearance goes 75 per cent of the way in getting a job.

Table Nagging Will Not Help Children Eat

Particular Kind of Food Served Plays Important Role in Hunger.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

AS a rule children are hungry little animals, and the call to meals is heeded with alacrity. Normal hunger is the sauce that flavors the simplest types of food. We have all seen children gnawing away with great satisfaction on a crust of bread, while others, surfeited with everything the market affords, disdain the most tempting menu. Unwittingly the mother may destroy appetite by urging food when there is no need or desire for it.

Many Other Factors.

There are many other factors that destroy appetite; for example, excitement, desire for play, fear, embarrassment, overfatigue. Following a crying spell, a disappointment or any sort of emotional upset, the stomach virtually goes on strike.

Again, if a child rushes in from the playground utterly fatigued, he may not care to eat. A half hour of rest is usually followed by a desire for food. There is nearly always a food struggle with the lean, pale, beanpole youngster who is also tired.

Change In Environment.

Now and then we observe that a change in environment will restore appetite. A youngster who is eating poorly at home may attack food with real zest at a neighbor's table or on a visit to grandmother's. Food somehow takes on a new meaning, cookies are so alluring; grandmother is so comforting in her attitude and so full of understanding that hunger comes with the force of an avalanche.

The problem of adequate nourishment for children must be attacked from the cause and effect point of view. If food is not properly prepared, if the diet is poorly balanced, appetite may wane. But almost any sort of food will be devoured eagerly under the stimulus of hunger. With good food and a hungry child, normal gain in weight and in strength cannot fail to follow. Should it not do so a careful search for an organic cause, some disease of the digestive system or an infection should be made.

Milk Between Meals.

The particular sort of food that is served, of course, plays an important part. If the child craves meat (protein), a generous portion should be allowed at one meal each day, but every effort should be made to provide a balanced diet, although fats may be greatly reduced. The drinking of milk at meal time may bring on a feeling of fullness that results in the neglect of other foods. Milk is needed, and it may be better, in some instances, even though the stomach has not emptied itself completely, to give milk midway between meals.

The simple expedient of surprising the child by not coaxing him to eat and even allowing him to go without food for a day or two has often resulted in the appearance of hunger and the reestablishment of the normal food habits.

MISS HILDEGARDE HAMILTON

By Hope Ridings Miller.

ONE BY ONE—country by country—gates to the business and professional world in Europe have closed against women. Many have blamed the situation on Hitler and Mussolini. Others have considered it merely a natural result of a depression that left too many men walking the streets in search of jobs.

But whatever the cause, whatever the result, women still have access to one field where there is no discrimination, and where success is not scored according to sex.

Miss Hildegarde Hamilton, artist and writer, who recently returned from an extended visit to Europe, brought back these impressions along with a number of interpretations, on canvas, of Old World scenes and people. Tomorrow afternoon she will be honor guest at a tea to be given by the League of American Pen Women at its studio at the Burlington Hotel, where her paintings are on exhibit.

Yesterday while visitors drifted into the studio to glimpse her work, Miss Hamilton evinced her belief women in Europe are still ensconced in its world of art, and that the exodus from business and the professions may mean women abroad will now have a chance to develop their talents along artistic lines.

Marriage and Career.

"A woman who goes to an office early each morning and returns late in the afternoon has very little home life, and virtually no time to test her talent as an artist," she pointed out. "But if she paints or writes she can manage her own hours; and if she can dispose of routine quickly, she can sandwich her other work in between supervising her household and looking after her children."

Being a wife and the mother of two children, Miss Hamilton knows from experience that this is possible, that marriage and a career need not stand at opposite ends of the pole.

Much of her married life has been spent traveling with her husband, Dr. L. Hobart Ryland, and their son and daughter. But despite duties entailed by looking after a family, she has found time enough to capture on canvas scenes and persons that have proved interesting, to exhibit her paintings in numerous cities both in this country and abroad, to learn four languages, and to write and illustrate a book of short stories, "Human Bits."

She believes success in any line, artistic or otherwise, is largely a matter of "deciding what you want and keeping your eye on the goal." She credits what she has accomplished so far ("though it isn't much," she modestly said) to "starting early and staying at it."

Her talent and persistence were evidently coupled with a dauntless spirit born of the belief aspiring women artists were entitled to whatever opportunities were open to men. This led her, as a girl, to challenge a Spanish tradition by attending art classes in Seville where only men were enrolled. Since then Spanish women have followed her example; there are now four enrolled in the Seville Art School.

She also mentioned that "in Turkey, encouraged by winning suffrage, women are coming to the fore in public life; that in Yugoslavia and Hungary women painters are gaining recognition; that, in fact, so far as she observed, "there is no discrimination against women in art circles anywhere in Europe."

The traditional belief that men artists are superior to women is noted now only in the comments of continental critics, she said. When they wanted to be laudatory, they always averred, "Miss Hamilton paints like a man," and then elaborated on the idea her work has strength in color, line and perspective.

Decisions Up to Children.

She mentioned this only to illustrate a point and not to prove her prowess as a painter. Obviously loath to discuss at length either herself or her work, she continually tried to turn the conversation into other channels, and talked of her husband, who is professor of romance languages in the University of Kentucky, and her children, Melagonde and Hamilton, both of whom were born in France and "can wait until they are 21 to decide what their nationality will be."

The children, she said, are keenly interested in her work; and often stand to watch; but she has no plans for their future, hasn't, in other words, set her heart on either of them following in her footsteps.

"I'm leaving their careers strictly up to them," she explained. "I hope each will find some absorbing creative interest, but they will make their own choice."

Children Copy Their Manners From Parents

Adults Are Advised to Set Example of Courtesy to Youngsters.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

"JOHNNY, go get your father's glasses."

Johnny went, though not with good grace. He was used to being ordered to do this or that. His mother called it "asking." Johnny, on the other hand, said to his little sister, "Get me my coat," he was told not to order May about, and had he phrased a request to his mother in so abrupt a manner, he would have been given a sound scolding for impertinence.

Even the most considerate and reasonable parents demand far more courtesy from their children than they give them.

Children learn their behavior far more from imitation than from precept. No matter how often one tells a child to speak politely to people and ask courteously for favors, the child will do what he sees those about him, and especially his parents, do. If they order him about, he is apt to give orders in turn; and the only reply to their demands is apt to be refusal to obey.

Had his mother said, "Johnny, would you go and get your father's glasses?" or better still, "If you are not too busy would you do it?" the response would probably have been more immediate and cheerful.

Had he in response to the request said, "I can't just this moment. I'm busy," nothing would have been lost. The child, however ungracious, would have been quite within his rights. But if to the order, Johnny returns the reply, "I don't want to," or "I can't" or "I won't," the parent has raised an issue which may end in a nasty quarrel.

Regard to courtesy in the home and especially toward one's children, pays for itself in the training it gives and in the pleasant relationship which it establishes between generations.

Too Many Weddings, Says Divorce Judge

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla.—"There are not too many divorces, but there are too many marriages."

So says Judge H. F. Atkinson, who has tried many divorce cases during his 13 years on the bench here.

"These youngsters meet each other," he added, "decide they'd like to get married, and go ahead—without weighing the terrific emotional, economic and spiritual responsibilities they're assuming."

Fine Grades of Broadcloth and Voile Are Out in Force.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—"The gayest seasons in years," say the society columns. And the small miss—aged about 3 to 6—knows what's in fashion as well as her mother! She chooses delicate pastels or sparkling jewel colors for her party dresses—and sallies forth gay as a Christmas carol!

Fine grades of broadcloth and voile are out in force, and often prettied up with hand-embroidered collar and cuff sets and much smocking, in the approved English fashion.

Something mighty festive about the crisp swish of taffeta, and well-berd looking taffetas are crowding the young set's parties this season. Many have full, balloon sleeves, and glory in pastel shades that look good enough to eat! The lass sketched above at the right wears a pastel-covered taffeta in the very latest style!

The silk dress in dark colors is decidedly a fashion-first this season. Most of the smartest ones hang straight from the shoulders, with no hint of a waistline at all.

The very feminine young lady who likes her frills and furbelows will choose at least one georgette frock for Sunday best and dress-up occasions. Some are frilled and smocked and stitched to within an inch of their lives, and turn her out looking dainty as a princess in a fairy tale.

When she reaches the sophisticated age of 7 or 8 she'll want a dress of velvet or velveteen in the same glowing jewel tones that mother likes for her own dinner dresses. Sometimes finished off with collar and cuff sets of snowy lace. Quite a just-from-Paris air to these velvet dresses for the very young!

Dark Colored Silk Dress Is Decidedly in the Fashion Parade.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE HAVE our private opinion of the big-hearted relatives who offer to furnish the bride's house, then proceed to do all the picking and choosing themselves. We ask you one and all—what is the solution? There isn't any, really—though a lady can gradually weed out and change and repair the damage after a fashion.

The dining room furniture that a great aunt bought for the gray-eyed girl and her young man never was pretty—and it looked worse each year. The girl who had to live with it had ideals about her dining room and what it ought to be. But what, pray tell, can you do with mongrel furniture that is too good to replace or to ever wear out. The rug was all right—a misty shade of rose—and the walls were going to be repainted, but what to do about the furniture?

Well, we sympathize! The best antidote we know of is paint—but in the case of a good dining room set, we don't advise the amateur to attempt the job as it is very difficult to get just the right dignity and patine in finish that is required in a more or less formal dining room. Here would be our plan—antique white for the furniture—then figured slip covers for the chairs in a pattern predominantly French blue. For the walls a lovely shade of powder blue with glass curtains in ivory and draperies of the same figured material as the chair slip covers. Still another plan would be to have the furniture refinished in pale antique green with old ivory walls, slip covers in the same shade of green, then ivory glass curtains with draperies of a mellowed French floral pattern.

Legion Seeks Congress Ban On Red Books

Veterans Push Own Study; Prettyman Believed Favoring Curb.

The American Legion is carrying on its investigation into school books of the District of Columbia, and it will call on Congress for action unless the Board of Education committee, just appointed, bars all books depicting communism in an allegedly favorable light.

This was learned last night, shortly after a cryptic statement by Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman had left District Building reporters with the impression that Prettyman, author of the opinion that Congress had intended to permit teaching the facts about communism, believed the questioned books should be thrown out of the local schools.

Prettyman had just scanned three textbooks condemned by the Federation of Citizens Associations—"An Introduction to American Civilization" and "Changing Civilization in the Modern World," both by Harold Rugg, an education professor of Teachers College, Columbia University, and "Modern History," one of a series of history books by a Cornell history professor, Carl L. Becker. These books are now being examined by a special Board of Education committee headed by Robert A. Maurer.

The books were brought to Prettyman, he said, by a private citizen. When reporters asked him about them, the books still piled upon his desk, the scholarly looking lawyer replied briefly:

"These books were brought down for me to see, and out of natural human curiosity, I, of course, looked them over. But the question of whether they should be kept in the course of study is a matter before the school board, and is not before me officially, and therefore, I will not attempt to pass on them.

"However, if the committee is to use my opinion as a guide, which I understand they are to do, they should not have much difficulty in deciding the question which they have to decide."

He refused to go beyond this statement, saying the reporters, familiar with his style, could draw their own inferences.

Started by Legion.

Meanwhile, it was learned the American Legion's District department originally spurred the textbook drive, its commander, Joseph J. Malloy, saying it had appointed an investigating committee, headed by Frank Peckham, last March.

Rather bitterly Malloy asserted it had been "necessary to get the Federation of Citizens Associations" before notice of the question would be taken.

He said the board's acting for a textbook inquiry, after having voted for the Prettyman opinion long before taking such action, indicated that "it didn't know what it was doing the first time and didn't know what was going on in the schools."

"It voted first, and thought later," Malloy said. "Of course we hope now that the committee will cast these books out of its own volition and that the board will not permit this teaching of communism."

Plans Congress Fight.

"We hope the question of teaching will be withheld now until Congress meets. In line with the action of the commanders and adjutants of the American Legion at Indianapolis last month, we will go before Congress to uphold the law as it stands now. We think it should be permitted to stay as it is.

"And if, somehow, the board committee should decide that those books were all right, we would go ahead with our own inquiry and ask Congress to cast those books out."

Frank L. Peckham, wartime corporal in the tank corps and now a local attorney and head of the Legion's committee on the textbook and character education issues, commented:

"If it's an honest investigation, and I assume that it will be, it will clear up the matter so far as it concerns these textbooks which Mr. Sullivan (George E. Sullivan, for the Federation of Citizens Associations) has so successfully criticized. I assume it will be carried out in good faith, and then they must of necessity change the type of textbook.

"But if they do keep these textbooks, then our committee will undoubtedly recommend to the executive committee that we go before Congress to overrule the Board of Education."

Peckham, former past commander of the District Department, is vice president of the Sentinels of the Republic. With him on the legion committee are the Rev. Howard E. Snyder, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Atonement, and Raymond J. Quenin, employe of the Treasury's procurement division.

The Indianapolis meeting mentioned by Malloy resulted in departmental commanders promising to urge their Congressmen to bar teaching of communism in the District, and has directly brought, thus far, three letters to the Board of Education from Representatives, who uphold the legion's stand against teaching of communism in any form—Representatives George Stewart, of Delaware, and Palmisano and Kennedy, of Maryland.

Teachers Praised

A resolution opposing the teaching of communism in the public schools was adopted at last night's meeting of the Anacostia Citizens Association.

The action also expressed "full confidence in the academic integrity of the teaching personnel of the schools as well as in their patriotism and loyalty to American ideals."

Five persons were admitted to membership. They were Mrs. Anna Mulligan, Miss Frances Davenport, C. J. Burton, Mrs. Grace Darling and W. J. Flemmons.

A large group of children were guests of the association and viewed a motion picture illustrating automobile manufacture.

Police Block Howard Aid's 'Freedom' Talk

Detectives of the Police Department's crime prevention bureau last night spoiled a speech Dr. Ralph Bunche, head of the political science department of Howard University, was to have made to the Capital City Forum. They broke up a meeting of the forum in Workman's Circle Hall on the second floor of 1502 Fourteenth street northwest.

Dr. Bunche was to have spoken on "Academic Freedom," and in so doing expected to comment on the current Communist controversy in Washington public schools. Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, leader of the anti-red forces in the school controversy, was invited to speak, but failed to appear.

Detectives Odessa S. Hunt and John Apostolides, of the crime prevention bureau, had taken possession of the hall and were waiting for members of the forum when they arrived for the meeting.

Detectives told forum officers the organization was without a permit to occupy the building and that anyway absence of a firescape at the rear made holding meetings in the building a violation of fire regulations.

Dr. Bunche and officers of the forum expressed belief that the police action was another phase of the anti-Communist campaign, though the organization's officers disclaimed any connection of the forum with the Communist Party. In evidence of this they listed the following as their sponsors:

D. N. Shoemaker, described as a leader in the Society of Friends and a distinguished botanist; former Representative Jeanette Rankin, member of the National Council for Prevention of War; Paul W. Ward, newspaper correspondent; Dr. John Gray of the Graduate School of American University; Gardner Jackson, formerly of the AAA consumers' counsel, and Dr. Bunche.

Dyer, jr., and the Georgetown Law Club of Washington, Justice Jesse C. Adkins, president.

Delegates Honored.

The official delegates were the guests of Father O'Leary last night at a dramatic program presented in the college hall by the Mask and Bauble Club, presented under the direction of the Rev. Frederick H. Schoberg, S. J., moderator of the club, and William Shea, dramatic coach.

The Washington alumni of the law school held a "home-coming" celebration and smoker last night at the Mayflower Hotel. Justice Jesse Adkins, president, and a committee consisting of Frederick Stohlman, Richmond B. Keech and Joseph A. Cantrel was in charge of the program. Athletic Officials and head coaches of Georgetown and Maryland were among the 300 or more guests.

New York, Nov. 22 (U.P.).—Gertrude Wettergram, Swedish contralto, who arrived today to make her American debut with the Metropolitan Opera Company greeted a reporter—"If there is an ounce of kindness in you or decency, or regard for my future, kick me, my good man; kick me." Eric Wettergram, her husband, explained it was for good luck—an old Swedish custom. The reporter kicked.

Board Grooms Donnell Anew As Penal Chief

Baltimorean Is Urged on Commissioners Again to Supplant Barnard.

Members of the Board of Public Welfare yesterday urged the District Commissioners again to supplant Capt. M. M. Barnard, veteran superintendent of District penal institutions, with Harold E. Donnell, of Baltimore.

The action came as a surprise, as Commissioner George E. Allen, who has immediate supervision over welfare activities, previously had declared he was satisfied with the administration of Capt. Barnard and intended to keep him in his post as long as he could.

Capt. Barnard has been serving for more than two years under an indefinite extension of service by Presidential order. He is beyond the statutory retirement age of 70 years. He has been in the District service for 20 years. It was under his direction that the model walless prison was developed at Lorton, Va.

The Commissioners deferred action on the board's request because Commissioner Allen was ill at his home. Formal recommendation that Donnell be appointed was made by the board weeks ago. The Commissioners have authority to appoint the prison head on recommendation of the board.

Resumption of the drive to place Donnell in office caused a stir among those who advocate appointment of Col. William L. Peak, formerly superintendent of the District Jail and now superintendent of the District reformatory at Lorton.

Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, has told the Commissioners a District man should be appointed to the post.

Amos 'n' Andy Hunt, And Miss Broadcast

When Amos and Andy missed their first regular broadcast in their eight years on the air at 7 last night, the official excuse was that they had been delayed by "circumstances beyond their control." Here were the circumstances:

Amos and Andy — Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll—went hunting at the Woodmont Rod and Gun Club near Hancock, Md., yesterday as the guests of Lawrence Richey, former secretary to President Hoover.

Furthermore, the hunting was exceedingly good. Amos got his limit in turkey, pheasant and duck. So did Andy. That makes two turkeys, four pheasants and a dozen ducks.

What was more, on previous Maryland hunting trips Amos and Andy hadn't done so well.

What was more than that, when they got back to the club last night they discovered that Henry P. Bridges, club secretary-treasurer, was giving a dinner in their honor.

After the dinner, a Maryland State police escort clearing traffic, Amos and Andy were driven to Washington, arriving in time for their 11 p. m. broadcast to Pacific Coast stations.

Cider Claims Thanksgiving Punch Bowl

Beverage Is Well Adapted for Family Gatherings on Holiday.

CIDER should make a definite claim on the family punch bowl for Thanksgiving evening. It is the most intriguing of the late fall beverages, and one that is particularly well adapted to the family gathering, for it can be enjoyed by the younger members of the family as well as the adults.

You will want a row of cider filled mugs or a huge punch bowl filled with this sparkling brew after the traditional popcorn roast and taffy pull this Thanksgiving evening. There is no form of simple entertainment quite so conducive to spontaneous gayety as this old-fashioned way of spending the evening after a delicious Thanksgiving dinner at home.

Just in case anyone should find hunger aroused later in the evening there should be large spice cookies, a homemade spice caked topped with mocha pecan frosting, sugar cookies ladened with raisins, or sugar encrusted doughnuts ready upon the pantry shelf, and more cider, for, no other beverage so charmingly complements the flavor of each.

English Tradition.

If you wish to steal a little English tradition for your Thanksgiving evening celebration fill your mugs with the following cider drink: The wassail bowl, as you may know, is a heritage from the Yuletides of Merrie England.

Wassail Bowl of Twelfth Night Cider.

1 dozen large apples or
6 medium red apples quartered
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons cinnamon
1 cup water
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 tablespoons sugar
1 small stick cinnamon
6 cloves, 1 nutmeg, tied in cheesecloth bag
Thin rind half a lemon
2 quarts cider.

Bake apples in pie tin with water, cinnamon and sugar. Keep hot. Put cider in porcelain-lined kettle. Add vanilla, sugar, spice bag and lemon rind. Simmer 15 minutes and pour into punch bowl. Remove spice bag and lemon rind. Add baked apples and serve very hot. Serve in mugs or punch cups with apple or quarter of apple in each.

Sophisticated Flavor.

A more easily prepared cider drink but one that has a more sophisticated flavor may be prepared by the following recipes.

Cider Cup.

1 pint soda water
1 pint cider
Rind half an orange
Rind half a lemon
Mint leaves
Few slices orange
½ cup sugar, scant
2 tablespoons orange curacao

Add curacao to rind of fruit and sugar; cover and let stand two hours. Add cider, strain and stand on ice to chill. Add chilled soda water, mint leaves and orange slices and serve immediately. The success of any cup depends upon adding the charged water just before serving.

Nickel Cast Iron Skillet Introduced

It Diffuses Heat, Assuring Uniform Temperature.

A new product for the home is a silvery skillet made of 20 per cent nickel cast iron. In appearance the new skillet, which gleams like sterling silver, is more attractive than the dull black, old-fashioned frying pan. The metal of which it is made has been used in industry for ten years. Originally developed for resistance to corrosion in such installations as packing plants, oil refineries, fish canneries, etc., it was subsequently found to be ideal for home service as well.

Scientists explain that cast iron is the ideal metal for cooking utensils such as this because it is not one uniform metal, but is iron containing tiny particles of graphite scattered through it. These particles help to diffuse the heat through the entire utensil so that uniform temperature is maintained. The introduction of nickel into cast iron causes an even wider and more uniform diffusion of the graphite particles.

Gingerbread Sauce.

A steaming sauce, especially a lemon flavored one, is delicious served on hot gingerbread, and is a welcome change from the inevitable whipped cream. The sauce is also less expensive than the cream.

Apple Stuffing Excellent Substitute For More Filling Turkey Dressing

For those few who do not like turkey dressing, Dorothea Duncan, Home Economics Editor of The Post, suggests a Thanksgiving bird stuffed with large red unpeeled but cored wine saps. The apples will add a sweet succulence to the meat as well as serve to keep the bird from caving in during the baking.

Individual Pumpkin Pie Answers Thanksgiving Dessert Question.

By Dorothea Duncan.

NO MATTER what part of the United States you know as home your Thanksgiving dinner will be planned around the symbolic turkey. Naturally, your native State will have much influence in your selection of accompanying dishes, sauces, dessert, and the kind of stuffing, for each part of the country has its own customary turkey accompaniments.

In many families the old-fashioned New England Thanksgiving dinner is considered too heavy a meal, and the menu is planned to include turkey and cranberries in some form and pumpkin pie, but many of the characteristic side dishes are omitted. This is all a matter of personal preference. In some families it is really a matter of too little oven, range or elbow space or too little help.

Many persons who enjoy equally well the turkey and the accompanying dishes—sweet potatoes, vegetables, etc.—find that unless they are particularly fond of dressing they prefer to omit this part of the meal as it is one of the most filling of the Thanksgiving dinner dishes.

Stuffing of Apples.

A turkey roasted without any stuffing will have a tendency to cave in at the sides and will not be very attractive when brought to the table on a platter to be carved. It is suggested that whole cored but unpeeled cooking apples be used to stuff the bird. The apples which are fairly well protected from the oven heat during baking may be removed from the turkey and served as an accompaniment for the meat instead of cranberry sauce. Cranberries can be brought into the menu in some other form, for example, as a tart cocktail, a jellied salad or a pie. The giblets usually added to the dressing of a baked turkey can be added with mushrooms to the gravy or saved and cooked with some of the large bones or the carcass for soup.

The suggested Thanksgiving dinner is not a tradition in any one part of the country. The oyster cocktail is particularly popular in Washington, Virginia and Maryland. The creamed turnips are always included in the New England Thanksgiving dinner, and the pecan sausage pudding is a favorite in Mississippi.

A recipe for one of the suggested dishes follows and another appears elsewhere on this page.

THANKSGIVING DAY DINNER MENU

Oysters on the half shell, cocktail sauce
Celery curls — Cranberry sauce
Roast turkey
Sausage pecan stuffing — Gravy
Candied sweet potatoes — Mashed white potatoes
Creamed turnips or buttered broccoli
Stuffed preserved orange salad with French dressing
Individual pumpkin pies — Apple pie
Coffee — Cider
Salted Nuts — Mints — Cheese — Popcorn

Sausage Pecan Stuffing.

1½ cups freshly rolled bread crumbs
1 country sausage
Turkey liver.
½ teaspoon thyme
½ cup salted pecans
1 pod red pepper
½ cup chopped celery
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 scant tablespoon butter
1 onion
Broth
2 tablespoons cooking sherry

Melt the butter in a frying pan, and add to it the chopped turkey liver, chopped onion, and sausage which has been taken out of the skin. When these ingredients are beginning to brown, add the bread crumbs, broth enough to moisten, thyme, chopped red pepper (without seeds), celery, parsley, and salt and pepper to taste. Cook for three or four minutes; add cooking sherry, coarsely chopped salted pecans and mix all together well, and fill the body of the turkey with the stuffing. The cooking sherry is not essential to this dressing but when used does impart a delicious flavor.

This amount of stuffing will be a generous amount for a 12-pound bird (undressed weight).

Fern for Flower Bowl.

Small pieces of fern placed in the water of a flower bowl that has no holder will be a great help in keeping the stems erect. The stems should be thrust into the mesh.

Lucy Allen's Book on Cooking Appears in Up-to-Date Form

'Modern Menus and Recipes' Gives Detailed Directions on Household Work and Contains a Wealth of New Ideas on Preparing Food.

REALIZING that there is a definite need for a cook book which will please the most discriminating epicure, and yet include recipes the preparation of which is not too involved, Lucy G. Allen, director of the Boston School of Cookery, has carefully tested and chosen the contents of her new book "Modern Menus and Recipes."

Her book, which has been popular since 1915 among thousands of American hostesses, has been revised twice to keep it in tune with modern ideas in cookery, table service and menu planning. The latest edition of this famous book is making its appearance this month.

The completely revised edition shows the distinct trend toward an independence in introducing an unusual touch which was quite unknown in entertaining some years ago. Miss Allen reveals the greater simplicity of formal as well as informal entertaining, a note that has become very much in the foreground during the last few years of limited budgets and apartment entertaining.

Detailed Directions.

The book's detailed directions on the duties of the waitress, including the care of the dining room and the dishes, the care of silver and brass, the removal of stains, directions for laying the table, and the care and serving of fruit, salads, etc., make the book of paramount interest to the young woman who is just beginning her career as a hostess.

The book includes notes on carving, and suggestions for making menus to meet all occasions of primary as well as secondary importance, with special reference to buffet spreads and Sunday night suppers. The pages devoted to table service will be of utmost importance as a guide for the woman who may or may not have a maid, for the ideas are practical as well as useful.

Wealth of New Ideas.

"Modern Menus and Recipes" will be a joy to the woman who has been following the old-fashioned type of cookbook that makes a humdrum affair of the three-meals-a-day. She will find a wealth of new cookery and entertaining ideas. The recipes, following the modern trend, are understandable and easily followed, and though some of them are definitely for special occasions, the bulk will bring new dishes to everyday menus.

Each of the book's 15 chapters is devoted to a special subject. Special attention has been given to the usual topic of meat, fish, vegetable, cake, bread and soup cookery. Chapters devoted to miscellaneous recipes, hors d'oeuvres, sandwich fillings and points on menu-making, are high lights of the book.

"MODERN MENUS AND RECIPES," by Lucy Allen. (Little, Brown & Co., $2.50).

Mayonnaise Enhances Fruit Salad Dessert

A fruit salad dessert can be enhanced by the addition of mayonnaise to which ground or grated peppermint stick candy has been added. The addition of the candy provides a refreshing flavor and transforms the dressing to an appealing rose color.

"Pillow" candy mints add just the right degree of sweetness and a tangy fresh mint flavor to fruit cocktails. Combine these ingredients the next time your menu calls for fruit cup: Sliced ripe bananas, canned grapefruit and juice, and white "pillow" mints, slightly crushed. Pile in sherbet glasses. Chill. Garnish with a sprig of mint or green cherry.

Preserve Salad Is Appropriate For Turkey Day

Oranges Basis of Suggested Treat for Thanksgiving Festive Board.

A SALAD is not always included in the Thanksgiving dinner menu, possibly because it is one course upon which there hangs no tradition.

If a salad is included, however, it is usually made of greens and served with a simple dressing. An elaborate salad is entirely out of place. Sometimes a small jellied mold, of a flavor that complements the turkey, is served. Fruit flavors, cider, orange, cranberry or lemon are the most popular.

The following salad has been suggested for the Thanksgiving dinner this year because it is just a little bit unusual but it also has the essential qualities of lightness and complementary flavor.

Stuffed Preserved Orange Salad.

6 small seedless oranges (California)
18 glace cherries
18 small prunes
5 cups sugar
5 cups water

Boil the oranges until the skin can be pierced with a straw. Drain, and when cool enough to handle, punch three small holes in each orange using some cutter about ¾ of an inch in diameter; insert three cherries in each orange. Then, with a larger round cutter, punch three large holes and insert in each orange three prunes, uncooked and stones removed.

Make a sirup of the sugar and water and boil the oranges in this sirup for 35 minutes. They may be used when cold or put into preserve jars which have been sterilized, with the hot sirup poured over them and sealed.

To make a salad of the oranges, chill and slice them. Nest several thin slices on beds of crisp lettuce and serve with French dressing.

Beet Cups for Salad.

Tomatoes and peppers are not the only available cups for salads. Beets, boiled, peeled and hollowed out are excellent for this purpose. Soak the beet cups in French dressing before using and fill with chopped mixed vegetables and nest in crisp lettuce. Serve with additional French dressing or a dash of mayonnaise.

Turkey Menu Needs Good Giblet Gravy

This Recipe Is Suggested for Novices.

A good giblet gravy is an important part of the Thanksgiving dinner. If you are cooking your first festive bird and naturallly your first giblet gravy you will want the following recipe.

After the turkey is roasted, pour off the liquid in the pan in which the bird has been roasted. From the liquid skim off 6 tablespoons of fat; return fat to roasting pan and brown with 6 tablespoons of flour. Add 3 cups of stock in which the giblets, neck, and tip of wings have been cooked; or if preferred, 3 cups of milk or part milk and stock may be substituted for all stock. Cook, stirring constantly, until thick; then season to taste with salt and pepper. Add giblets, cut in small pieces, heat well and serve very hot.

Plan Boards Weigh Sites OfMemorials

No Decisions Made by Fine Arts and Park Commissions.

Jefferson and Cleveland Projects and Mellon Gallery Topics.

Sites for the proposed Thomas Jefferson memorial, the Grover Cleveland memorial, and the Mellon art gallery were discussed yesterday at a joint session of the Fine Arts Commission and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, but no definite decisions were reached.

A location for the Thomas Jefferson memorial that appeared most promising is a short distance south of the Washington Monument at the Tidal Basin. Other sites were submitted, however, by experts of the Park and Planning Commission. The final decision will rest with the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, which expects to meet before Christmas.

The commissions did not go very deeply into the question of a site for the Mellon art gallery, because representatives of the Mellon interests have asked for a chance to discuss their plans with the joint planning bodies in the near future.

Tell of Funds.

Representative Emanuel Celler, of New York, Federal Communications Commissioner George Henry Payne, Cleveland F. Bacon, nephew of Grover Cleveland, and George P. Le Brun, secretary of the Grover Cleveland Memorial Association, met with the commissions and explained they intend to raise $250,000 for a memorial to Cleveland. They expressed a wish to be able to lay a cornerstone for the memorial by March 18, 1937, which will mark the hundredth anniversary of Cleveland's birth.

The commissions decided that steps should be taken to restrict the construction of gasoline stations in the Capital. A request will be made that applications for station licenses in the future be submitted to the District Zoning Commission, so that the site may be considered in terms of city planning and local needs.

Thomas S. Settle, secretary of the Park and Planning Commission, outlined a general legislative program, which included laws relative to the findings of the District-Virginia Boundary Commission, a revival of District airport legislation, consideration of the bills to rename thoroughfares in the Mall for Maine and Missouri, and a promotion of the bill to authorize construction of a public stadium in Anacostia.

Plans Approved.

Approval was given new plans of the Alley Dwelling Authority, details of the Pan-American and Bureau of Engraving annexes and highway changes necessitated by low-cost housing development in Benning road and Hollywood Park.

Final approval was given plans of the National Capital Parks office to construct a playground in Turkey Thicket at Michigan avenue and Tenth street northeast with WPA funds.

The Fine Arts Commission approved architectural designs for a housing development at Sixteenth street and District Line and inspected paintings and sculpture, done under PWA, to determine whether they are appropriate for the Justice Department and Post-office buildings.

Transit Fares To Be Studied By Utility Unit

Commission Assails Service; Will Demand Improvements.

Threat of valuation proceedings and street car and bus fare reductions was made yesterday by Public Utilities Commission members as they reiterated their determination to force improvement of service by the Capital Transit Co.

Valuation studies now under way will be completed and analyzed within a short time and proceedings looking to modification of fares will be instituted within a few months, Riley E. Elgen, chairman of the commission, said.

Sharp criticism of the operation of the company was expressed in a letter made public during the day. It had been written by Mr. Elgen to John H. Hanna, president of the company, on October 17. Failure of the company to bring about improvement in service was responsible for the formal notice given Thursday that it would hold public hearings to hear complaints and compel improvement.

The company, Mr. Elgen said in his letter, had failed to operate cars and buses on the schedules which had been required by the commission. A year ago, he said, an inspector discovered the company had not operated 20 northbound cars on the Mount Pleasant line between 7 p. m. and 8 p. m., although schedules required their operation. Schedule runs of buses also had been dropped out at times, he said.

Mr. Elgen cited a lengthy break between buses on the P street line, in violation of schedule requirements. No explanation could be made by the company, he said. There was a break of 25 minutes in service on the Anacostia line for which no explanation was given, he said.

"Numerous instances such as the above," he told Mr. Hanna, "indicate to us that the operating departments of your company lack information. Proper service can not be rendered until those responsible for the operation have correct hour-by-hour information."

The company also should devise tests to determine the fitness of its employes to operate street cars and buses, Mr. Elgen said.

The holder of the sweepstakes ticket, Mrs. Priscilla Cary, 1322 Twelfth street northwest, cautiously refrained from tempting fate by insisting she had no idea how she would spend the money.

She was notified by messenger she would receive $30,000 if the horse finished first, $20,000 if second, $10,000 if third and $5,000 if fourth. Even if he runs out of the money she will get something; she wasn't told how much.

"This is the first time I ever bought one of those tickets," Mrs. Cary said.

War, Weather Worry Vender Of Chestnuts

John Morris felt last night's cold wind through his overcoat. He shivered and felt good—because he thinks the cold will help his business.

For some time John has been praying for a good cold snap. He sells roast chestnuts at Fourteenth and K streets northwest.

More than a roasting pan, it takes a good stiff November "norther" to make chestnuts appeal, John says.

The war affects his business, too. Italy's fighting goes on thousands of miles from Fourteenth street, but that makes John's battle for a living none the less grim. His chestnuts—as do those of most of the venders in Washington—come from Italy, and since the war started the price has been going up and now with the League's sanctions on—who knows, the supply may be cut off altogether?

Business Complication.

Added to these troubles there is another business complication. The recent warm sun dries up John's high-priced chestnuts. If they lie exposed on his push cart as much as one whole day he hasn't nearly as many pounds of nuts to sell as he paid for.

John looks on all these problems and the prospects look dark, indeed.

"I try only to make the living," he explained, poking his charcoal fire and adding a dash of water to the spit. "That is all. And some to send my wife—she is in Greece. I send her some money, but in twenty year that I am here I do not make enough to bring her over to thees country."

John says the chestnut season should last another month—"then the chestnuts—we can get them no more."

"What do you do then?"

"See thees cart?" he said, pointing to the red wheels and the red box. "Thees cart help me make the living. I push it, and sell—banana, maybe. Then sometime I look for a job. Maybe I find one, and make for a while twenty dolla a week—cooking in a restaurant.

"But now I look for a long time—when I am not selling here—but I find nothing to do. So I pusha de cart around."

If John has a good week in the chestnut business he "sell one hundred pound, maybe." There's a profit of seven or eight dollars in that.

But, as John says, "business (but he makes it "beeznis")—it has not been so good now."

He hopes for better times with freezing days.

Return Home, Mother's Plea To Missing Girl

Mrs. Thyrring, ill of Worry, Says Daughter Will Not Be Punished.

Mrs. Viggo Thyrring, mother of Alva Carmen Thyrring, 15-year-old Central High School pupil, who vanished without a trace on October 25, is ill with worry, it was learned yesterday.

Believing her daughter may be afraid to return home, Mrs. Thyrring asked newspapers to make an appeal to the girl to return to her home at 417 Oglethorpe street northwest. Neither Mrs. Thyrring nor hre husband have any thought of punishing Alva.

Police chiefs in more than 1,000 cities have been asked to help find the girl. Washington authorities have exhausted every clew in an attempt to locate her.

Mrs. Daniel Carpenter, mother of 15-year-old Robert Carpenter, missing since November 12, yesterday told police that she had a letter from her boy, saying that he was working at Charleston, S. C.

Benny Henderson, 24, who had been sought since Monday, when he abandoned an automobile in the middle of Key Bridge, has been located, police were told by relatives. Harbor police had dragged the river for his body.

Bessie Jones, colored, of 1012 Fourth street northwest, requested authorities to help her in her search for a relative, "Joe," who several years ago was given a lifetime job for rescuing a white man.

Other persons reported missing recently who have not been located are the following, police said:

John Passas, 6, of 64 U street northwest; Vince Parker, 27, of 1217 I street northeast; James Cunningham, 35, of 908 I street northwest; Edwin Sherzer, 12, of 715 G street northeast, and Herb Sharp, 59, of 119 Fifth street southeast.

D.C. Revenue Boost Asked By Prettyman

Additional Income Must Be Found, Statement on Taxes Warns.

Any New Program to Get Public Hearing Before Congress Action.

Additional revenue will be required by the District in the future, E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel and chairman of a special tax committee named by the Commissioners, said in a statement issued yesterday.

As this was announced, the Commissioners received a letter from Representative Virginia E. Jenckes, of Indiana, member of the House District Committee, suggesting the tax committee should be composed of "as many taxpayer citizens as there are appointed officials."

Mrs. Jenckes requested that she be sent a report of the deliberations and activities of the committee to date, and said she has been impressed with the "unfair and unequal tax burden" which citizens of the District are forced to carry.

Clarify Figures.

Prettyman's statement was designed to clarify officially interpretations which have been placed on figures contained in studies of District financial affairs of the past 15 years. These were made public after a meeting of the committee Wednesday.

The corporation counsel said:

"Neither the committee nor the Commissioners have the slightest notion of presenting a tax program to Congress without full opportunity for the public to consider the various proposals."

No Taxes Asked.

"The committee has not, as yet, either considered or proposed any additional taxes. It has just reached the point where it has accumulated in succinct form figures relating to revenues and expenditures over the past 15 years."

Informal discussions by committee members have led to the conclusion that there must be an increase in the $5,700,000 Federal appropriation toward District expenditures.

The committee members have estimated the District would need more than $7,000,000 additional revenue annually in the next few years to carry out a program of necessary public improvements.

Fisherman Scores $5,000 Hit With Bottle.

The tossing of a bottle by a 14-year-old fisherman, whose ire was aroused when a speedboat at Colonial Beach, Va., allegedly repeatedly sent high waves over a wharf where he was fishing, may cost the owner of the speedboat $5,000 if the verdict of a jury in the District Supreme Court, rendered yesterday, is sustained.

The boy, it was shown, hurled a two-quart jar at the boat. It struck Miss Katie E. Nowland, of Alexandria, Va., over the eye, inflicting a 2-inch wound. Harry Grossman, owner of the boat, was sued on the theory his agent, the pilot of the boat, should have known the repeated approaches to the wharf would lead to reprisals such as bottle-throwing.

The youth who threw the bottle, now an inmate of a Maryland institution for juvenile delinquents, was sent to the witness stand to relate how he became enraged at the speedboat's maneuvers and finally threw the bottle. Attorneys Alvin Newmyer and D. G. Bress represented Miss Nowland.

Chains Prevent Rare Book Walkouts

Valta Parma, curator of the rare book collection of the Library of Congress, shows the chain used to fasten tomes to the reader's table—just in case the reader might try to "borrow" the book permanently. The book is "Lives of Fathers," printed in 1470.

Library Trusts Its Readers, But Vault Holds Rare Books

Superintendent of Congressional Collection Says Suspicion Breeds Thievery, but Valuable Volumes Repose in Burglar-Proof Chamber.

With 5,000,000 books, ranging from the newest mystery novel to rare old editions of the Bible, under his care, Martin A. Roberts, superintendent of the Library of Congress reading rooms, has devised many precautions to keep his shelves intact.

But even with all the help of modern science, he'd have little success, he says, if he couldn't place confidence in the 1,000 or 1,500 readers who use the library every day.

"I've found a librarian has lots less trouble if he gives people some credit for honesty," Roberts explained yesterday. "It doesn't pay to suspect everyone who comes in. If you do, some reader is sure going to get the idea that he'd like to steal a book out some time."

Roberts believes his policy of trust may account for a decrease in the number of books stolen, and the attempted thefts. The library's problem in this respect is a negligible one.

"Of course we lose some books," admitted the librarian, "but it is surprising how small the number is, considering that so many people come here."

Roberts doesn't depend on human honesty entirely, however. The Library of Congress corridors and shelf rooms are policed. Guards do stand at doors checking books as they are carried out. Watchmen do circulate through the reading room to see if volumes are mutilated.

Most important, valuable books—the rare ones—are housed in large, modern concrete vaults. Books belonging there are never meant to go out—a thief would have to get them through three locked doors—one of steel, one of grilled iron, a third of heavy bronze.

Built two years ago especially for the 70,000 volumes classified as "rare old books," this huge room is modeled after Philadelphia's Independence Hall. But, unlike its historic original, it has only one entrance—the immense bronze door.

Inside, attendants wait on readers, most of whom are research workers with a purpose. But only the librarians can pass through the grilled door, down a tile corridor and through the steel doors into the rooms where the books actually are. A reader can use the books as long as he likes, but upon leaving he must hand a green slip to the guard showing that all books have been returned to the desk. Watchmen keep an eye on the books all the time they are being read.

Once one of the rare books was mislaid in a drawer and not found for six months. But no book ever has been stolen from this room.

Valta Parma, curator of the rare book collection, says the system used eliminates all possible red tape, while assuring the library of every protection.

"Most of the people who come here are serious about the work they are doing and appreciate the value of the library. That's one reason we don't have much trouble," commented Roberts. "But then there are people who would try to steal from the Bank of England. So we don't take any chances."

Cut to 2,000 In Taxicabs P. U. C. Aim

Law to Be Sought From Congress Providing Gradual Reduction.

A Compulsory Insurance Act for Hackers Also Will Be Asked.

The Public Utilities Commission will propose a law to bring about the gradual reduction in the number of Washington taxicabs on the streets from approximately 4,000 to 2,000 at the next session of Congress. It also will reiterate its request for a compulsory taxicab insurance act.

Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, said the drastic cut in licensed taxicabs would be effected very slowly so that no great number of operators would be thrown out of employment.

"As cab operators dropped out of the business for one reason or another," Keech explained, "we would not license any new cabs until the number had been reduced to around 2,000.

"I believe this reduction would prove beneficial to all concerned. The 2,000 cab operators would make more money per man than the 4,000 now on the streets, and motorists and pedestrians would profit by the easing of the traffic congestion."

Would Prevent Monopoly.

Keech expressed the view that 2,000 cabs would be sufficient to prevent any one company from monopolizing the field and thus endangering the present zone scale of fares. Moreover, the commission feels much more confident of being able to control rates in the future because the rider to the 1935 appropriations act was sustained in District Supreme Court recently.

To extend its control over the taxicab industry and other common carriers, such as interstate bus lines, the commission also expects to ask for broader police powers.

Keech pointed out that at present many violations of commission orders can be punished only by civil court monetary judgments. Such penalties in the case of impoverished and irresponsible taxicab operators are useless, as the operator has no property.

In other instances the commission has authority to prosecute violators of its orders in Police Court. The commission wants to extend this power so that most violations by taxicab and bus operators could be punishable as misdemeanors.

Act Sought Vainly.

The compulsory taxicab insurance act has been sought vainly for several years. All District agencies and most civic bodies have gone on record as favoring the law, but a small bloc of members of the House have withstood them successfully.

Many of the cab associations are favorable toward the proposal, but the larger companies want authority to set up their own insurance funds. Organizations such as the Independent Taxi Owners Association, which operates the Diamond cabs, contend that high insurance rates would endanger their business.

Comedy, Romance and High Adventure Continue to Characterize New Theater Bills

Barbary Coast Melodrama Has Call at Earle

By Nelson B. Bell.

"FRISCO KID." Warner Brothers picturization of a story by Warren Duff and Seton I. Miller, adapted to the screen by the authors, featuring James Cagney and Margaret Lindsay, with Ricardo Cortez, Robert McWade, Fred Kohler, Lili Damita, Barton MacLane, Donald Woods, Joseph King, George E. Stone, Joseph Crehan, Robert Strange, Addison Richards and Joseph Sawyer. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Reviewed Friday morning.

Painting a vividly realistic canvas of San Francisco's notorious Barbary Coast in the pioneer days of the late 1850s, this colorful screen rehabilitation of a turbulent era in West Coast development catches something of the epic quality of history in the making, only to have it partially vitiated by the weakness of the narrative's slender thread of romance.

As long as "Frisco Kid" adheres to the depiction of the tumultuous events that led to the formation of the Vigilantes and their expunction of the lawless element that caused the metropolis of the Golden Gate at one time to be known as "the wickedest city in the world," it is an authentic and thrilling document, combining fact with its fiction at least in equal proportions.

When it permits the daughter of a murdered publisher to step in and, at the moment of their highest frenzy, with a few fervid words, sway the verdict of the Vigilantes as it pertains to a man she has alternately loved and hated, the fiber of the story is seriously weakened and its power ebbs away into the familiar sentimentalism of "just another movie."

Paints in Sweeping Strokes.

Since they deal with identical subject matter, are motivated by the same events and largely the same emotions, it is impossible not to compare "Frisco Kid" with "Barbary Coast," the contemporary release from the studio of Samuel Goldwyn.

The present subject is the more imposing of the two in its sweeping treatment of a community problem which it refuses to individualize to the extent that was done in the drama in which Edward G. Robinson and Miriam Hopkins played the roles now impersonated by James Cagney and Margaret Lindsay. Mr. Robinson, on the other hand, was a more sinister racketeer than Mr. Cagney's Bat Morgan. Miss Hopkins came from the "other side of the tracks" from Miss Lindsay. She has no counterpart among the pivotal characters of "Frisco Kid."

In its building of events to the inexorable climax which they impose upon the predatory and murderous group of political plunderers that initiates them, the current film is melodramatically impressive and cumulatively effective. It builds steadily and surely to the only outcome that can logically eventuate from the preliminary situation upon which it is founded and by that token is sound and moving drama.

The central character is a young, shanghaied sailor who arrives in San Francisco friendless and alone. By his own physical fearlessness, and the happy circumstance of having killed the town's principal bully in a brutal barroom brawl, he grows into a place of importance among the lawless element waxing rich off the shady practices of "The Coast." The two worthy influences in his life are Solly, the Jewish second-hand dealer who first befriends him, and Jean Barrat, whose paper is the city's only organ of uplift.

Runs Into the Law.

Through a progressive series of swindles, murders and other acts of violence, Bat finds himself finally, along with all his henchman, looking through the hangman's noose into the dim mists of eternity, as the Vigilantes swing into righteous and rebellious action. It is the last minute plea of Miss Barrat that saves him from the fate that is ignominiously inflicted upon all his associates. It is here that "Frisco Kid" sacrifices some of the dramatic integrity "Barbary Coast" is able to boast.

The portrayals of Robinson and Cagney as the Coast's chief racketeer are as far apart as might well be imagined. Cagney plays with a quiet ominousness where Robinson blustered and delegated an underling to do his dirty work. Cagney does his own dirty work when occasion demands. Margaret Lindsay plays her role mechanically and without warmth, thus losing much of the play's promise of romantic strength and believability.

Ricardo Cortez, as he was in "Special Agent," is a suave and homicidal bandit, whose act of murder at a performance of opera sets afoot the business of the Vigilantes and their retributive justice. Fred Kohler, Barton MacLane, Joseph King and Johnny Wray are among other famous "bad men" who add to their reputations for villainy in their present assignments. George E. Stone recalls his fine work in "Cimarron." Aside from Miss Lindsay's there are no important feminine characters in the play, which, by the way, is elaborately produced, well directed and handsomely photographed.

Stage Acts and Supplementaries.

The stage portion of the new bill at the Earle is composed of experts in their respective fields. The vaudeville interval is headlined by the Three X Sisters, whose vocalisms are among the most engaging that come along during a season. Their harmonies and tricky arrangements are as clever as ever and to their repertoire this season has been added the versatile endeavors of an amateur radio show. Their circus, bagpipe, hill-billy and other specialties remain as perfect as before.

Scoring one of the definite triumphs of the performance are Cherry and June Preisser, those two madcap acrobatic dancers from the South, who virtually stopped the show in its tracks yesterday afternoon.

Plays Lead in Two New Pictures

The versatility of the gifted young actress pictured above is attested by the contrasted character of the roles in which she is appearing currently on the screens at the Warner Brothers Earle and Metropolitan Theaters. At the former, she is leading woman with Jimmy Cagney in a turbulent drama of San Francisco's notorious Barbary Coast, "Frisco Kid"; at the Metropolitan, a conspicuous figure in a domestic comedy bearing the title of "Personal Maid's Service." The young woman, of course, is Margaret Lindsay, graduate of National Park Seminary at Forest Glen, Md.

Miss Audrey Sieber is Edgar Bergen, best of the ventriloquists, whose act always seems a little better by reason of its superior material, his own uncanny sense of comedy and timing and the quizzically humorous appearance of the dummy through which he works. The turn now includes two talented young women, one a singer of some note, who greatly interest the young fellow perched on Mr. Bergen's knee. The bill is completed by Helen Reynolds and her Skating Champions, an octet of roller artistes, who yesterday were reduced to seven by an accident to one of them early in the hazardous stunts they perform.

A new release in natural color in Paramount's "Popular Science" series and the Paramount News are the auxiliaries of a feature that bristles with action from first flash to final gunshot.

"A NIGHT AT THE OPERA." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by James Kevin McGuinness, adapted to the screen by George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskin, with music by Verdi, Herbert Stothart and Nacio Herb Brown, starring the Three Marx Brothers, with Kitty Carlisle, Allan Jones, Walter King, Ziegfried Rumann, Margaret Dumont, Edward Keane and Robert Emmett O'Connor. Directed by Sam Wood. Previewed Saturday, November 2.

By a perfected process of preparation that already has been outlined in these columns, George S. Kaufman, Morrie Ryskin, Irving Thalberg and the Marx Brothers—Groucho, Chico and Harpo—have contrived what probably will stand as the finest example of comedy construction ever to have found its way to the screen.

The secret process employed in the fabrication of "A Night at the Opera," briefly, was to play it as a "road show" before paying audiences until its comic content had been thoroughly tried and found true. The result, as revealed on the screen at Loew's Fox Theater this week, is a succession of "sure-fire" situations that contribute to the orderly continuity of a connected and reasonably plausible "plot" while supplying a dizzying and excruciating procession of hilarious "gags," good for at least a million laughs, although we lay claim to no tedious count or attempt to keep track of any bothersome adding machine.

We are only sure that at least a million laughs must have been necessary to have had that unaccustomed effect upon our sides, facade, lumbar regions and other seats of bodily anguish that betray themselves following extraordinary exercise of habitually unused muscles. We haven't laughed so hard in years—and we laugh easily, at that.

Must Be Seen.

It is, of course, fatal to the irresistible spontaneity of pristine humor to attempt any translation of it into the futile medium of cold and uninspired type. There is no way, therefore, in which the ridiculous developments that punctuate this magnificent excursion of the theater's most profoundly amusing madmen into the realm of opera may be expressed with anything like its original zest. The reader—if any—will simply have to accept the testimony of this typewriter and as many cash customers as could pack themselves into Loew's Fox Theater yesterday that here is a superlatively funny picture.

We might go on at great length about the scene in the tiny stateroom aboard ship, or the one in which Harpo is yanked out of a porthole by a crane and seems to be "trying to hang himself," or the one at the opera, where every unheard-of thing that never happened at an opera happens, and mirth becomes positively maudlin.

Or we might go back of any of that to the very opening of the film and start the laughs there. It really makes no difference where the beginning is made. "A Night at the Opera" is completely funny. But probably never more so than when the Metropolitan orchestra swings from the score of Verdi's "Il Trovatore" into the lilting waltz strains of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game"—and the Marx Brothers do!

Neither is there any profit to a reviewer in attempting to single out any one of the Marxes as the best of the three. Each has his fair share of glory—Groucho as head talker, Chico as the manager who seems Italian only because his parents were, and Harpo, as the silent zany whose antics speak louder than any words Will Hays would permit him to use!

Play Piano and Harp.

Chico finds a plausible place in the steerage coming over from Italy to do a little expert fingering at the pianoforte and Harpo some of his distinguished strumming of the instrument from which he derives his name.

As a background for the incomparable antic naivete of these prize buffoons is a legitimate romance of the opera houses, involving Kitty Carlisle as the soprano; Allan Jones, the tenor—both singers of recognized merit—and that excellent actor, Ziegfried Rumann, seen in the Capital with Ethel Barrymore a few seasons ago and with Katharine Cornell in Sidney Howard's "Alien Corn," as harried impresario.

When Mr. Rumann goes dashing about backstage in his long underwear through a bit of Marxian whimsy, comedy may be said to be practically rampant.

But don't take our word for any of this. The better way is to see for yourself. It is perfectly safe, since the management is presenting "A Night at the Opera" under a money-back guarantee if you don't laugh. They are that sure it is a riot.

On the stage, Ed Lowry ostensibly is mastering ceremonies in a revue of considerable dimensions, although at yesterday's second performance the ceremonies occasionally seemed to be mastering him.

More Fun on Stage.

Among those he introduces, over and above Phil Lampkin and his stage band, are the Three Slate Brothers, a trio of young gentlemen almost as nutty as the Marx boys, whose clowning is familiar in the Capital. It has never seemed quite so irresponsibly ridiculous to me as it did yesterday—a grand act, if you find it easy to go crazy.

Then there are June Carr and Norman Frescott, with whom Lowry teams effectively in two separate routines. With Miss Carr he sings, dances and banters, letting her do most of the work in her artless, carefree and roughhouse manner. Miss Carr is a high-power dynamo, once she gets going.

Mr. Frescott, on the other hand, is the audience half of one of those baffling Indian fakir acts of telepathy, who makes the travesty—if that is what it is—extremely pithy and amusing, even if a little embarrassing to some of his "subjects" among the customers.

The Five Jansleys, whirlwind gymnasts and human foot jugglers, open the bill, and the Allen Kent Foursome, two youngsters and presumably their parents, demonstrate the contrasts between the old buck-and-wing of a quarter-century ago and the broken-rhythm tap dancing of the present. An excellent turn of its kind, already well-known here.

The Fox Movietone News is the screen complement of a feature that deserves every extravagant thing that has been said about it.

"PERSONAL MAID'S SECRET." Warner Brothers picturization of a story by Lillian Day, adapted to the screen by F. Hugh Herbert and Lillie Hayward, featuring Margaret Lindsay, Warren Hull, Anita Louise, Ruth Donnelly, Frank Albertson and Arthur Treacher. Directed by Arthur Greville Collins. Reviewed Friday morning by W. A. Whitney.

The keeping-up-with-the-Joneses philosophy has often been deprecated, but little has been said regarding "living up to "Lizzie," when Lizzie happens to be a personal maid and housekeeper with even more aspirations for social and financial success for her mistress than the employer herself. Such is the situation in "Personal Maid's Secret."

The method of piloting her youthful employers to social heights, however, was not the secret of the personal maid, here depicted by Ruth Donnelly; rather was it a daughter, who, however important to the maid, is of minor significance to the comedy-drama unfolded upon the screen.

The maid's scheme was simple: by having the family progress from one establishment to another, each of increasing magnitude, and by entertaining those whose contacts might prove invaluable to the husband's insurance business, the ladder to social and economic security was climbed with astonishing ease.

Ruth Reveals Repression.

In such a situation, the maid naturally would be the important character, and Miss Donnelly nobly achieves that end, deviating the while from the usual flippancies generally associated with her and playing the part in a restrained manner, yet allowing full vent to the comedy aspects of the narrative.

The couple who live up to Lizzie's ideas is played by Warren Hull, who makes his camera debut, and Margaret Lindsay, a twosome of pleasing personalities, whose histrionic abilities are by no means strained by the assignments. Young love, ultimately successful, is depicted by Frank Albertson and Anita Louise. And there is Arthur Treacher to fill the void in Lizzie's life and thus have the picture fade out on three happy couples.

Diversified Supplementaries.

Chief among the supporting subjects is an issue of the Paramount Pictorial, wherein are shown Cartier's famed craftsmen creating a pearl bracelet order, the scenic and historic wonders of Charleston, S. C., and songs and dances of Latin America.

"Roof Tops of Manhattan" offers a variety of entertainment, plus a bit of plot and continuity, with Gilbert Lamb, Bob Burns, Deane Janis and Billy and Beverly Bemis prominently featured. Another of the "Voice of Experience" series depicts a variation on the mother-love theme.

The combined releases of the Paramount and Universal newsreels round out a diversified and entertaining program.

Palace

"MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the book by James Norman Hall and Charles Nordhoff, adapted to the screen by Talbot Jennings, Jules Furthman and Carey Wilson, starring Clark Gable and Charles Laughton, with Franchot Tone, Herbert Mundan, Eddie Quillan, Donald Crisp, Dudley Digges, Henry Stephenson, Spring Byington, DeWitt Jennings and Vernon Downing. Directed by Frank Lloyd. Reviewed second week, by Isabel Harraman Mangum.

You may have heard some small mention of the record-breaking audiences that have filled Loew's Palace to capacity during the engagement of "Mutiny on the Bounty." It may now be added that the enthusiastic acclaim, and the continued attendance, has swept this epic of the sea into a second week.

History and the Hall-Nordhoff books tell us that at the end of 1787 Capt. William Bligh was sent to the Pacific in command of H. M. S. Bounty. His severity and brutality provoked a mutiny, during which Bligh and 18 loyal members of the crew were set adrift. After a journey of 4,000 miles in an open boat, they landed at Timor, in the East Indies, Bligh still determined to bring back the mutineers and have them hanged.

The cinema has presented this to us in three magnificent parts and at a cost, they assure us, of $2,000,000. After viewing "Mutiny on the Bounty" we can well believe it.

Lusty, savage, stark, frequently unbearably brutal and practically always grim, "Mutiny on the Bounty," strangely enough, holds enthralled the feminine portion of the audience as well as the masculine.

Is Stupendous Drama.

There is something salty and alive, virile and stupendous about the whole thing that dwarfs the floggings, the tortures, the maggots.

There are other moments of sheer beauty in the island sequences, when we are given a brief respite from the exploiting of life in the raw. The picture is two hours long and we somehow feel that the Tahiti atmosphere is thrown in as a bit of intermission and that the Tahiti love interest doesn't quite measure up to the rest of the film.

And then, of course, there is Charles Laughton, who brings to Capt. Bligh the reality of an artistry so perfect that his very viciousness is tinged with all the inconsequences of human ambition, cruelty, weakness and sublimity.

It is an astonishing performance, this finely drawn delineation of a man despicable in every way, capable of sinking to the lowest depths of sadistic brutality and who yet is magnificent in his courage and his belief in his duty.

Final Touches of Greatness.

Adding Clark Gable as Christian, Franchot Tone as Midshipman Byam, Dudley Digges as the ship doctor and a large and uniformly excellent supporting cast, together with superb photography by Arthur Edeson and a touch of genius in the directing of Frank Lloyd, makes this one of the artistic achievements of the current cinema season and a smashing box-office sensation.

A Metrotone News and a short subject will complete the bill.

Columbia

"RENDEZVOUS." Metro-Goldwin-Mayer picturization of Maj. Herbert Yardley's book, adapted to the screen by Bella and Samuel Spewack, starring William Powell, supported by Binnie Barnes, Rosalind Russell, Cesar Romero and Lionel Atwill. Directed by William K. Howard. Reviewed, second week, by Dorothea Lewis.

It is absolutely not "Rendevouz (with love)," in spite of those sotto voce ads. This rendezvous is that of one ship with a couple of other ships.

Lieut. Gordon is a gentleman who is more important to Uncle Sam, back in the days of 1917, sitting at a desk, or standing in front of a blackboard decoding enemy wireless messages, than fighting at the front, and he's sad about it. Then there are enemy decoders who steal Uncle Sam's pet code, and shadowers and counter-shadowers. Uncle wins.

Spies have always seemed even more involved and careless to us than theatrical detectives, but here you have your spies right at home, practically in your lap, what with remarks about Fifteenth street and the State Department and the Russian Embassy (same address, but it had a Czar for boss then).

Moreover, they behave—some of them—in a fairly sensible manner, because Maj. Yardley, who wrote the book, knows all about his codes and ciphers. And, another moreover, William Powell, two handsome ladies and considerable brisk humor, are all mixed up in the international tangle.

Cast Comparatively Excels.

Powell is fine, as usual. The two handsome ladies are evenly divided; one blonde (Binnie Barnes), one brunette (Rosalind Russell)—one an enemy and one a very good friend. We thought Binnie the handsomer, but Rosalind has the best time, doing exceedingly well, except in her more exuberant moments. We like this lady better with dignity. Cesar Romero, as a very noble enemy code expert, is attractive.

On the Columbia stage, so long just a dust-catcher after an illustrious past, Adrienne proceeds to explain that she is not uncanny and then to make all sorts of answers to questions about alimony, life and death, jobs and taxes. We couldn't tell whether or not she is uncanny because she didn't get around to our question.

The film subsidiaries include a newsreel and cartoon comedy.

Tech Dramatic

"LEAVE IT TO PSMITH." The Tech Dramatic Club presents as its fall play the comedy-drama in three acts and five scenes, by Ian Hay and P. G. Wodehouse. Produced under the general direction of Mrs. Ada H. Coe, assisted by Rhoda Watkins and Virginia Willis, with stage construction supervised by Elmer Krehbiel. At the McKinley High School, November 22 and 23. Reviewed Friday night by W. A. Whitney.

The brilliantly written comedy-romance, flavored with jewel thievery, of Ian Hay and P. G. Wodehouse, "Leave it to Psmith," was presented last evening at the annual fall play of the Tech Dramatic Club. As was well evidenced by its enthusiastic reception, it was a fortunate selection, giving the players a reasonably difficult play in which to display their talents, at the same time providing a work of distinct audience appeal which could transcend any imperfections of presentation.

The players gave the lines a sincere, thoughtful reading, augmented by well-limned delineations, a circumstance that casts credit upon the cast, Director Ada H. Coe and all the others associated in the venture.

Taking the center of the stage naturally, was George Hayes, as Ronald Eustace Psmith, he to whom many things were left—and which he managed to take care of to the complete satisfaction of all concerned. Mr. Hayes was quite at home in the role. Opposite was Mary Anne Frazier, who brought a pleasing personality to bear upon the part of the librarian.

Support Is Competent.

Lady Middlewick, whose diamonds, newly inherited, were the center of intrigue, was played by Judith Greenwood with just the proper amount of haughtiness. Raymond Wannell made an adequate Lord Middlewick. Others in the cast included Raymond Skelton, John O'Connell, John McNeil, Frances Etheridge, Sydnor Hodges, Charlotte Booth, Addison Clay, Marianna Brumbaugh, James Brown, Charles Holmes, Margaret Pallansch, June McNown, Regina Adams, Sidney Clark, Elizabeth Imus, Sue Burnett, Dorothy Koontz, Eleanor Layton, Virginia Maloney.

The Tech Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dore Walten, played "Poet and Peasant" (von Suppe), "The Sunny South" (Lampe), "Espana" (Waldteufel) and "Le Pere de la Victoire" (Ganne), before the play and between the acts. Between the scenes of the first act, the Glee Club Quartet sang several numbers.

Goats Complicate Ethiopian Traffic

Lecturer Says Police Are Busy Despite Few Autos.

Ethiopia does not have many automobiles, but it has traffic cops just the same, Burton Holmes, travel lecturer, told the National Geographic Society last night in Constitution Hall.

Their job, he said, is to untangle the myriad of goats, donkeys and pedestrians instead of automobiles.

Mr. Holmes showed motion pictures of Emperor Haile Selassie's coronation, and gave his audience an up-to-date word picture of the ancient country invaded by Mussolini's Black-Shirt legions.

Ethiopians are not Negroes, but are more closely related to Arabian and Hebrew stock, with some admixture of Negro blood, he said. They prefer to be known as the "red people." They subscribe to the Coptic branch of the Christian faith and claim that theirs is the oldest continuous form of Christianity, dating from the fourth century A. D. Some estimates, he said, place the number of priests at 2,000,000.

Things and Stuff

New York, Nov. 22.

THEATERGOING has developed into a conflict, rather than an entertainment. At "Pride and Prejudice" I sat in front of a fellow who kicked the back of my seat. At "Winterset" there was a pest who encircled his program with an elastic band and played banjo notes on it. At the morbid "Night in the House" I sat directly in front of the most amazing gum-chewer it ever has been my misfortune to encounter, a bovine character who wired his gum for startling sound effects. At "Mutiny on the Bounty" three restless pilgrims stumbled into the aisle behind us, kicked their way to loge seats, and then woodpeckered the backs of our seats in time to the music. I have sat next to, or in front of, gentlemen who gave out asthmatic snorts and whistles; ladies who chattered their teeth; men who have audibly bitten their nails, and other Public Enemies who have disputed my right to elbow space on the arm rest. In fact, I have fought the good fight in every Broadway theater, each one of which has supplied a battle arena and sound effects. The only quiet evening I've spent in the theater this fall was at the Ambassador. Selected as a juryman in Al H. Wood's "Night of January 16th," I got to the stage, which is the only sanctuary in the bedlam of the theater. Actors are nice people, and they don't chew gum.

Band leaders honored old Abe Lyman two days back. True to tradition, they belabored the guest of honor with insults. Chief belaborer was Fred Waring, who startled us with his witticisms. Jack Benny, Ted Fio Rita, mustached Glen Gray, Xavier Cugat, Arnold Johnson and other band leaders spoke. Lyman tried to speak, but just at the moment he was about to get hot, oratorically, he discovered that Jack Dempsey had crawled up under the table and applied a hot foot.

He must have been in his late 70's, a fine, distinguished-looking old gentleman, a dinner jacket setting off his snowy hair. In solitary splendor, he sat at a table on the floor of the Hollywood and watched the midnight show and the 2 a. m. show. Occasionally, a waiter came to replenish the chilled bottle that rested in the ice bucket and to freshen the thin-stemmed glass. A deep and sober appreciation of the show was registered on the old gentleman's pink face. He nodded his head and occasionally smiled, in quiet enjoyment. Who he was, I do not know, but if any railroad was missing a president or a chairman of the board of directors, on Wednesday night, I know where he went to play hookey.

Huerta, Ending U.S. Exile, Goes Back to Mexico

Former President, Cleared of Political Charges, Leaves Los Angeles.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.—Fiery Adolfo de la Huerta, former President of Mexico, was on his way home tonight after 12 years in exile—leaving behind a promising career as a voice teacher.

Cleared of political charges that banished him from his homeland, the once rebellious leader headed back to Mexico City and the greeting of his close friend, President Lazaro Cardenas. It was not known whether a new political post awaited him.

The return terminated his "productive obscurity" in the United States, forced upon him since 1923, when his revolutionary movement against Gen. Alvaro Obregon failed.

In his obscurity he taught voice profitably to such pupils as Enrico Caruso, jr., son of the famous Italian tenor, and to Buddy Rogers, motion picture player and orchestra leader.

His parting salute to the United States was an expression of gratitude "to the American people for their gracious hospitality." Accompanying him to the border were his wife and two sons.

There were times when his life here was anything but the "obscurity" he claimed for it.

He was indicted in 1927 on charges of conspiracy to ship arms to Tucson, Ariz., in an alleged plot against the regime of Obregon and Plutarco Elias Calles. He was acquitted.

De la Huerta became a Mexican national hero when he broke with President Venustiano Carranza over the sovereignty of the State of Sonora. The Carranza regime was overthrown and De la Huerta became provisional president. He became secretary of the treasury in 1920 and was nominated for the presidency in 1923.

Shortly after the nomination an attempt was made to assassinate him. He accused the Obregon regime and took refuge in Vera Cruz. There he headed a rebellion against Obregon.

Legal Gambling Here Advocated By Mrs. Mason

Legalization of gambling in the District was advocated yesterday by Mrs. Agnes K. Mason, vice chairman of the Alcohol Beverage Control Board.

"I favor legalization of gambling for the reason I am convinced it will be impossible to stop gambling in the District," Mrs. Mason said. "Gambling under District control would yield much needed revenue which now goes into the pockets of the professional gamblers."

Announcement of her belief was made at the same time Mrs. Mason announced the board had dismissed proceedings against the Tower Pharmacy. The board had considered revocation of the liquor license of the pharmacy following arrest by police of a man not connected with the store on a charge of conducting a lottery and of the night manager for permitting operation of a pin-ball game.

Legalization of gambling has been fought over with increasing vehemence during the last two or three years.

License Refusal Upheld

The action of the District Alcohol Control Board in refusing to give back to Nicholas Phucas a retail liquor license he formerly held for an establishment on Georgia avenue northwest was upheld by Justice Jennings Bailey in the District Supreme Court yesterday.

Phucas said the board did not give him a complete hearing when it removed his license for an alleged violation of the rules. Through Rice Hooe, attorney for the board, the contention was advanced that the board's actions were not subject to judicial review. The decision, it was announced, would be appealed.

Bowl Hopes At Stake in 2 Clashes

California Will Oppose Stanford and Seek to Win Coast Title.

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Two games—3,000 miles apart—share the national gridiron spotlight tomorrow as the curtain rolls down on the 1935 campaign for many elevens.

A total of 124 games will be played, with conference titles at stake and smashing traditional and intersectional clashes scheduled as a fitting program for the last big Saturday of the season.

None of these encounters, however, offers the glory which will go to the winners of contests at Palo Alto, Calif., and Princeton N. J.

On the West Coast, 90,000 will fill Stanford Stadium to capacity to see California's unbeaten Golden Bears clash with the Stanford Indians in the last game of the season for both of them.

Seeks Tie for Title.

Stanford, which has lost only to U. C. L. A. this year, will be fighting to tie for the Pacific Coast Conference title and smash back into the Western Rose Bowl picture which it has dominated for the last two years.

If California wins, the Bears will capture the conference crown and automatically qualify to represent the West in the New Year's Day classic. Defeat will tie it with Stanford for the championship at four victories and one licking each, and almost certainly will result in U. C. L. A. precipitating a three-way deadlock next week when it meets Idaho in a conference engagement.

If Stanford wins, both it and California will be in the running for a Pasadena bid and it then will be up to the conference members to decide which team goes into the bowl.

The East Coast has Princeton-Dartmouth to share national attention with the Western classic. Both are undefeated and will play before some 58,000 in Palmer Stadium—the largest crowd there since the Princeton-Yale duel in 1928.

Out of that scrap will come the mythical Eastern champion, because neither team has rough going in its final battle next week. Princeton plays Yale and Dartmouth meets Columbia.

Dartmouth has eyes on the Eastern invitation to the Rose Bowl and will be near the top of the list if it finishes the season with a clean slate.

Three of the Nation's four remaining undefeated, untied elevens meet rugged opposition. The other, N. Y. U., is idle but closes its season on Thanksgiving against Fordham.

The Southwestern giants—Southern Methodist and Texas Christian—have tough foes. S. M. U. meets Baylor and T. C. U. plays Rice. Both are deadlocked for the conference lead and, if they both triumph, will settle the issue next week.

Minnesota Faces Wisconsin.

Minnesota, recognized last year as national champion, needs to dispose of Wisconsin to give it another perfect season and at least a tie for the Big Ten title. Ohio State, tied with the Gophers for the lead, meets Michigan. All Big Ten teams wind up the season with other pairings bringing together Indiana-Purdue, Northwestern-Iowa and Illinois-Chicago.

Greatest intersectional clash will be at South Bend, Ind., where Notre Dame rings down the curtain against U. S. C. Yale-Harvard in the East is the best traditional battle, with the Elis favored.

In the South, Duke can clinch the

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

WIN, lose or draw, Georgetown and Maryland are doing the sensible thing this afternoon in playing each other. Against a foreign opponent of the same relative caliber, either team would be lucky to draw 5,000 paid admissions. Tossed against each other at Griffith Stadium today, the two colleges will attract upward of 15,000 unless all signs fail, traveling expenses will be nil, and the athletic exchequers of both schools will receive by far their greatest single bonanza.

POVICH.

And, aside from the financial consideration, Georgetown and Maryland will be obliging a local football public that for six years has starved for intra-city competition. The two teams met last year, 'tis true, but that was a game staged at College Park and so bungled by the officials of the two schools who charged a flat rate of $3.30 per ticket that it had little appeal for the great bulk of the city's football minded.

It doesn't have to be a great football game to be pronounced as such by the fans who see it. In a setting tense with anticipation by spectators who have long debated the comparative ability of the two local teams, runs of 8, 10 or 12 yards, and even shorter dashes, are easily magnified in importance. The local rivalry angle removes the contest from the category of a football show which depends upon perfection in execution for success. Thousands of hopes will be riding on every pass, each attempted tackle will drive pangs of despair or shafts of joy into 10,000 hearts, depending on its success.

Let George Washington bring on its Alabama, its Rice and its Tulsa games. Compared to the significance of a Georgetown-Maryland contest, they are unimportant to native Washingtonians, who, I can easily believe, are slightly tired of thrilling to the feats of visiting stars whose names they never heard before and probably will never remember. The way I see it, the dyed-in-the-wool football-goer wants to maintain no strict neutrality. He or she wants to yell his or her heart out for one of the teams out there on the field. And, when Georgetown and Maryland play, it constitutes a guarantee of a complete absence of calm indifference.

THERE have been better, vastly better, Georgetown and Maryland teams than will take the field today, but events seem to have conspired to present an evenly matched pair of outfits today. At the finish of Maryland's 6-0 victory over Georgetown last year, the man who would have predicted that today's game would be an even-money bet would have been considered a bit "teched in the haid." All but one of Georgetown's linesmen were to graduate, and, with the exception of South Sothoron, Maryland was to have virtually all of its stars for the next year.

But Maryland was struck a telling blow when Andorka, a bulwark at center, was declared ineligible, and the team has never appeared to recover from that blow. Meanwhile, at Georgetown, Hagerty has produced a sophomore line that has bordered on the sensational. Only two touchdowns have been yielded by Hagerty's team this season. And for the Georgetown backfield Hagerty found available in Tom Keating a sophomore star who has blossomed as the best ball-carrier on the squad.

Out there today it will be a veteran and a more polished Maryland team against a fiery, talented, but comparatively inexperienced Georgetown crew. Upon its lateral-passing attack and the individual running of Tom Keating, Georgetown's chief chances depend. Maryland is the more versatile eleven, adept at forward passing, but seems destined to win only if it can shake Billy Guckeyson loose of fiery Georgetown tacklers. They will be the marked men of the afternoon—Keating and Guckeyson.

EASTERN HIGH passed, swiftly and decisively—Tech High passed out of second place in the series standings—and the 1935 inter-high series passed into history yesterday as the Lincoln Parkers zoomed to a 7-0 victory at Central Stadium on one fast thrust through the air.

A scanty crowd of 2,500 saw Eastern spring a mild upset for its first triumph over Tech in the 43-year history of the inter-high series. The winning touchdown came on a perfectly executed oblique pass late in the third quarter from Jack Shugrue to Russ Kidwell for a total gain of 15 yards.

The scoring play was an exact duplication of the pass by the same combination which carried the blue-clad forces to the point where Quarterback Shugrue was able to strike for the touchdown. This Shugrue-to-Kidwell battery accomplished through the air what the ball-carriers of both teams were unable to all afternoon. Two smashing, jolting lines stole the show from the ground-gaining corps, who due to hard tackling, were decorating the ground more than they were gaining it.

Finally Gets Break.

It was after these two charging lines had nullified all offensives launched by either team that Eastern finally took advantage of a break it earned by the alertness of Bob Brand, one of the outstanding ends of the series. Shugrue punted midway in the third period from his 21-yard line to the Tech 40, the ball bouncing up and hitting Chubby Nowlin, Tech halfback, on the chest. As it rolled away, Brand, always in the vicinity of a falling punt, sprang on it on the Tech 35-yard line.

On the first play, Shugrue fell back and shot a bullet-like pass out wide to Kidwell who took it running full tilt, and veered along the side lines for about 15 yards before being thrown out of bounds on the Tech 16-yard line. Roy Michaels was stopped after making a yard, Stanley Wells, of Tech, knocked down Shugrue's pass on the goal-line and the Tech line held Michaels for no gain.

It was fourth down and 9 to go. Shugrue coolly faded and again shot the wide pass to Kidwell, who was racing obliquely out to his left. The fast little halfback took the toss over his shoulder on the 7-yard line and scamped over the goal line standing up. Big John Donovan, place-kicking guard, booted the extra point.

Tech Punt Blocked.

Tech had its big chance to score in the first two minutes of play, when Joe Oehmann, big tackle, smashed through to block Shugrue's punt as the Eastern field general attempted to kick from his 15-yard line. Oehmann recovered at that point, but Tech was unable to cash in on the opportunity.

Francis Crimmins was stopped for no gain. On the next two plays he ripped off 6 yards, and on fourth down picked up 3 more, but was stopped just short of a first down on the 5-yard line. Shugrue punted out of danger and a few plays later after another exchange of kicks, Eastern was holding the upper hand as the result of a fumbled punt by Wells recovered by Kidwell at mid-field.

Shugrue's punting gave Eastern a 25-yard gain on another kicking ex-

Bowie's Double Pays $2,026; Five Cash In

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

BOWIE RACE TRACK, Nov. 22.—Five persons exchanged pieces of pasteboard, which cost them $2 an hour earlier, for $2,026.40 each here this afternoon as the record for daily-double mutuels in Maryland was shattered. Those who collected enough money to buy the two horses which teamed to produce the payoff were Mrs. G. C. Brenton and J. C. Kincheloe, of Manassas, Va.; Charles Keister, of Washington; Paul Watson and Charles Paton, of Baltimore. Three of the four men asked to be paid by check.

Mrs. Brenton and Kincheloe were the only ones with more than a "hunch" excuse for betting the combination. Mrs. Brenton is the wife of G. C. Brenton, trainer of Chilly Ebbie, winner of the first race, and owner and trainer of Politen, winner of the third race. Kincheloe is the owner of Chilly Ebbie.

This was the first day during the Maryland fall season that the Kincheloe-Brenton combine has had a winner, but it certainly made up for lost time. As individual betting propositions, Chilly Ebbie paid $51.60 and Politen, $13.10.

After Chilly Ebbie had won the first race the smallest pay-off on combinations ending in the third race was that of $1,125.80 on Little Argo. They ranged up to $5,066.20 on Vice Farley. No tickets were sold on Sandy Bell and Corvine in the third race, which had Chilly Ebbie as the first horse. Had either of these horses won, the $10,904 pool would have been divided by those who bet any ticket with either horse a part.

The winning pair was that of youth and old age, as far as horses are concerned. Chilly Ebbie, foaled and raised at Manassas, was winning the first race of her career, and Politen, an 8-year-old, was taking a purse at a sprint distance, one that he disliked, according to most of the experts.

It was rumored at the track late

Simmons' Sale To Tigers Is Due Today

By the Associated Press.

DAYTON, Ohio, Nov. 22.—The auctioneer's hammer fell for the last time at the minor league baseball mart today and the cutomers hustled back home for final conferences in preparation for the major league market in Chicago next month.

Deals involving at least a score of important big league players are certain to be announced at the Chicago mart, which opens December 12.

As the minor league meeting, attended by every major league club, closed, baseball managers were offering odds with no takers that the Philadelphia Athletics had sold Shortstop Eric McNair and Outfielder Roger Cramer to Boston and Third Baseman Pinky Higgins to the Yankees and that First Baseman Jimmy Foxx would stay with the A's.

Cinch, Says Dykes.

"It's a cinch Jimmy will stay there," said Jimmy Dykes, White Sox manager and a close friend of the Athletic home run hitter.

Dykes also said the White Sox had given Detroit a final "take it or leave it" chance to get Al Simmons.

Mickey Cochrane, a good salesman, is almost certain to get the o. k. from Owner Walter O. Briggs of the Tigers in Miami tomorrow.

Cincinnati picked up four minor leaguers and the St. Louis Cardinals released "Fidgety" Phil Collins, veteran pitcher, to their Columbus farm in the American Association.

The Reds also signed Hank Severied, veteran catcher, to manage one of their farms, possibly Wilmington, of the Piedmont League, or Macon, of the South Atlantic League.

The minors voted to hold the 1936 meeting at Montreal, November 18 to 20.

Only two important deals involving major league talent were officially announced.

Pittsburgh sent Catcher Earl Grace, Pitcher Claude Passeau and cash to Philadelphia for Catcher Al Todd. The New York Giants traded Pitcher Roy Parmelee to the St. Louis Cardinals for Second Baseman Burgess Whitehead.

From an American Association club owner, it was learned that Lou C. McEvoy, business manager of the St. Louis Browns, was certain to become the new president of the circuit, succeeding Thomas J. Hickey, retired.

Roth Beaten by Klick In Lightweight Fight

New York, Nov. 22 (AP).—Frankie Klick, the San Francisco lightweight star, flung another challenge at Champion Tony Canzoneri tonight by kicking and cuffing Al Roth, of New York, all around the ring in the ten-round main bout of an all-lightweight card in Madison Square Garden. The weights were 133¼ for Klick and 134½ for Roth.

Out Posts!

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 22.—A man who said he was a Georgetown University student told the city editor of the Times-Dispatch by telephone tonight that he was one of a party of students who had come here from Washington, sawed down the goal posts at the Richmond Stadium and stacked them neatly behind the clubhouse at the field.

The man did not give his name to the paper, but said that he and other students were returning to Washington immediately with souvenir sections of the uprights.

At least six different persons then called the paper and said they were Georgetown students. In each case the caller indulged in jibes at the Richmond police force.

Police investigated and found the posts at the field neatly cut into three-foot lengths.

A previous attempt by Georgetown rooters to pull down the posts after a football victory over University of Richmond on November 2 provoked a near-riot in which city police used their clubs on students. Three were treated at a hospital here and for days a sharp controversy raged in Richmond.

Statements pro and con concerning police "brutality" were issued from the office of the director of public safety and members of a citizens' committee.

15,000 Fans to See Hoyas Seek Revenge For Loss Last Year

Fair, Colder, Weatherman's Forecast for Game; Both Teams to Rely on "Big Three;" Coaches Reticent, but Hopeful.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

BURDENED down with enough football bombshells to start a small revolution, Maryland and Georgetown will meet on the neutral soil of Griffith Stadium this afternoon to decide whether Georgetown's sophomoric eleven has acquired enough polish and experience to combat the calm precision of the veteran Terp machine. The kick-off will be at 2 o'clock.

Approximately 15,000 fans are expected to see two of the District's oldest rivals stage the second annual renewal of their modern series. Two decades or more ago they met regularly, with Georgetown habitually winning by scores as lopsided as an 1890 football. But Maryland assumed a new lease on its gridiron life last year and came off the field a 6-0 winner.

Maryland rated as the favorite last November and came through with a 6-0 victory for its backers, but today the teams will face the opening kick-off on even terms.

Fair and Colder.

Fair and colder was the weatherman's forecast for the game, which itself promises to be better than fair and productive of rapidly rising temperatures.

A wide-open battle was promised by the rival coaches, and it would not be surprising to see both teams employing pretty much the same style of football. Maryland's hopes of winning are based on the passing of Coleman Headley, the running and kicking of Bill Guckeyson and the pass receiving of Vic Willis. These men comprise the big three of Maryland's attack. It will be tough enough for Georgetown if any one clicks, but if all three are in stride it will be virtually impossible to stop the Terrapins.

Georgetown's hopes are invested in men with similar qualities. Co-Capt. Joe Meglen, whose performance against Manhattan last week drew thunderous applause from football experts, will do the kicking. Tom Keating, sophomore quarterback with a whip-like arm, will do the passing and some ball carrying, while Co-Capt. Wally Herron probably will be on the receiving end of the passes.

Better Reserves.

Georgetown will have a slight advantage in the matter of reserve strength, as it boasts two lines that virtually are on par, while the best Maryland can do is substitute sparingly. The same situation exists in the backfield, where Maryland must rely on a couple of sophomores, Waverly Wheeler and Bill Bryant, for replacements, while the Hoyas have three complete backfields to throw into the battle.

Both coaches were loath to predict victory for their teams last night. Jack Hagerty, Georgetown's chief of staff, thought it would be a close and hard game, with his team having a chance to win. Jack Faber, of Maryland, echoed Hagerty's sentiments, predicting the season's toughest game for both teams and possibly a Maryland victory.

Jack Sharkey Stops Foe Twice

Winston Ordered Back to Ring After Quitting in First Round.

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Nov. 22.—Jack Sharkey, a most unusual battler in his prime, tonight launched his comeback campaign against Eddie "Unknown" Winston, Hartford Negro, under the most unusual circumstances.

The former heavyweight champion registered two separate and distinct knockouts over his frightened opponent in three minutes and 10 seconds of fisticuffing, but the first knockdown for the full count was ruled out by Referee Johnny Martin, who, supported by one of the judges, accused Winston of not trying.

Martin declared the fray a no-contest and the crowd of 12,470, the largest a Boston Garden bout has attracted in years, roared a mighty protest.

Personal Appeal.

Sharkey, pale and unnerved by this ending, slowly gathered his senses as a noisy throng surged about the ring. He ordered Johnny Buckley, his robust manager, to make a personal appeal to the members of the State boxing commission that Winston be permitted to make a fresh start. After five minutes of wild excitement, Commissioner Daniel J. Kelly granted Sharkey's plea.

Winston was a bit more aggressive getting underway for the second time and he managed to land two or three light jabs during the No. 2 first round, and about the same quota before being dropped twice, under heavy barrages to the head, in the second session.

The first barrage sent Winston down for nine and, after he pulled himself upright and started reeling, Sharkey nailed him in the center of the ring and sent him back to take the 10-count with an uninterrupted series of lefts and rights to the head.

Negro Cautious.

Winston, when the bout first got underway, was decidedly cautious. He made a few futile gestures when Sharkey jabbed him with lefts and, after a minute and 10 seconds, dropped under two right uppercuts. The Negro landed on his back and as he rolled over the official served notice on him that he was disqualified.

Sharkey starting on his comeback journey that no former heavyweight champion has ever been able to complete, weighed 196 pounds, 13 less than he carried two years ago when Primo Carnera stripped him of his title.

Winston's efforts were so feeble that it was difficult to get any kind of a line on Sharkey's condition. The former champion's footwork appeared fast, but the action was too brief and onesided to give his 33-year-old legs any kind of a testing.

Arkansas' Passes Beat Texas, 28-13

Austin, Tex., Nov. 22.—Arkansas bewildered the University of Texas with a lateral pass bombardment today and won a Southwest Conference game, 28 to 13.

Arkansas, displaying a tricky aerial defensive, ovecame a six-point lead and took command of the game early in the second period. The visitors scored twice more in the third and again in the fourth.

Jack Robbins, flashy Arkansas halfback, passed brilliantly and his sharp, driving slashes through the Texas line were a constant threat. He tore through the Texas forward wall for two touchdowns on runs of 20 and 14 yards.

Miss Mayer's Letter Accepting Bid Missing

Berlin, Nov. 22 (AP).—German Olympic officials said today they had not received an acceptance from Helene Mayer, native fencing star, now in the United States, to an invitation to compete for Germany in the 1936 Olympiad. It was understood here that Miss Mayer, who is in Los Angeles, had addressed a letter of acceptance October 28.

Chilly Ebbie. Politen Set Record

Owner and Trainer's Wife Among Those Getting Riches.

In the afternoon that Trainer Brenton had bought the only five tickets on the combination. If he did, he had friends cash them.

Loud booing greeted the finish of the feature race in which Scotch Run was credited with a nose decision over Happy Dear. The winner, a Vanderbilt Stable representative and the favorite, and the daughter of Happy Argo came to the wire together. From the press-box it appeared that Happy Dear had taken the decision. Happy Dear backers bounced cat calls off the pine trees along the backstretch while Scotch Bun betters went down to cash a $3.70 mutuel. The winner paid the same figure to place. Third money went to the St. Louis Stable's Swamp Angel.

Chilly Ebbie Surprises.

Chilly Ebbie, a field horse, scored a surprise victory in the first race at a $51.60 mutuel. The little daughter of Chilhowee, ridden by Joe Wagner went to the front at once, shook off Go Now and drew out to a long lead in the stretch and was being taken in hand at the end. Kendall Green finished gamely but second and Joan D. closed a gap to be third. Eleven maiden juveniles went to the post.

Camino Real won the day's second sprint in decisive fashion, leading Acautaw and Singing Heart across the line with plenty of daylight to spare. Ray Booker gave the winner an excellent ride and a $7.70 payoff was in order.

Politan made it a "double" for Trainer and Owner G. C. Brenton who previously had saddled Chilly Ebbie. The 8-year-old gelding packed too much stretch punch for Corner Boy and Little Argo. He was ridden by Harry Richards and paid a $13.10 mutuel.

Maryland foaled juveniles competed in the fourth race at 6 furlongs and the purse went to the Branncastle Farm's Ugin. The race drew seven supposedly promising 2-year-olds, but they failed to match the time of Chilly Ebbie, maiden winner of the first race. Ugin was clocked in 1:15 1-5 over the 6-furlong course, while the first race winner ran the route in 1:14. Wee Lad was second and Absconder, stable-mate of the winner, was third. Mad Mahdi, the favorite, showed high speed for a while, but foldded approaching the stretch turn.

McKinley Beaten By Eastern, 7-0

change and a pass, Shugrue to Kidwell, took the Light Blue to the Tech 10-yard line. Michaels was stopped for no gain and Connolly, of Tech, broke through to hit the same Eastern back for a 15-yard loss. Shugrue's punt was good for only a yard or two and Tech was out of danger.

The way in which Brand and Allan Miller, the two Eastern ends, were getting down under punts was a revelation. This phase of the Eastern defense was gainting ground consistently for the Lincoln Parkers.

Eastern's defense game never wavered after its touchdown. Although Crimmins broke away for a 23-yard run to the Eastern 47-yard line, the Light Blue braced and Tech was forced to kick. Crimmins intercepted a pass by Shugrue on the Tech 34, but a fumble by Wells at midfield after a successful pass, Crimmins to Kroutil, was recovered by Donovan.

G. W.'s Yearlings Tied By Western Maryland

A strong running game was offset by a vulnerable pass defense as George Washington's Freshmen eleven was held to a 6-to-6 tie by Western Maryland's yearlings yesterday at West Potomac Park.

Vic Sampson's 60-yard return of a punt in the first quarter was counterbalanced in the second period when Mudjwit passed to Lezinsky for a Western Maryland score. Both placement attempts for extra points failed.

Three times in the second half G. W.'s Cubs drove to within Western Maryland's 5-yard line only to be repulsed.

ACAUTAW, stoutly handled from the start, saved ground after offering keen contention for a half mile, but failed to menace in the closing stages. SINGING HEART improved her position on the outside and finished gamely. MINTON, outrun for the first five furlongs, came with good speed in the final drive. SWEET MOLLIE showed a good effort. PILLARITA lacked speed to enter contention. WAR SAINT stopped. HEEDLESS GAL went wide. MAD BETH weakened badly after racing strongly for five furlongs. The others were outrun.

POLITEN, forced to race on the outside to better his position, reached contention when approaching the home stretch, came strongly under a strong drive and was up in the last sixteenth to win going away. CORNER BOY outran his field to the first turn, took command when straightened into the home stretch, but continued mirthy on until the end. LITTLE ARGO, a stout factor in the early running, were down CORNER BOY when straightened into the home stretch, but tired suddenly in the final sixteenth. SANDY BELLE improved her position on the inside and came with a rush nearing the end. WORTHINGTON saved ground wherever possible, but could not get to the leaders. AMERICAN BELLE raced clear, but weakened after making her bid at the final turn. CALORIC, well placed for seven furlongs, failed to rally in the closing stages.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—‡UGIN, $9.40, $3.50, $5.60; WEE LAD, $7.10, $5.60; †ABSCONDER, $5.60.

UGIN, rated close to the leaders until nearing the home stretch, went into a short lead after reaching the home stretch, was stoutly ridden thereafter and came out slowly. WEE LAD, weakly handled, was permitted to drop out of contention after breaking nicely, circled his field and closed full of run. ABSCONDER forced a fast pace while chasing MAD MAHDI and held on well in the final test. ALIT was unable to reach the leaders at any stage. MAD MAHDI was under strong pressure while setting a fast pace. He flattened out badly when put to extreme pressure. BALCONY had no excuses.

SCOTCH BUN, kept clear of interference going to the first turn, moved up stoutly when settled on the back stretch, saved ground after bing straightened out for the stretch drive, came again and was up right at the end. HAPPY DEAR, raced next the inside from the beginning, responded to punishment and fought it out determinedly after gaining a slight lead in the closing furlong. SWAMP ANGEL, bettered his position readily to enter contention, but hung after getting to the leaders midway of the home stretch. GUIDING STAR, after making a bid and drove midway of the final curve. SAINTLITE met with slight interference going to the first turn and was never formidable thereafter. FLAG OF WAR was done after five furlongs. POSTPONEMENT stopped. HASTY HANNA showed brief early speed.

CREDULOUS, showing improvement to race along in a contending position in the early racing, wore CURRANTS down when reaching the home stretch, withstood a severe drive gamely and just lasted to stall off BIG GAWK. Latter, placed close to the leaders in the early running, came through on the inside entering the home stretch, then, finishing fast, just missed getting up in time. ROCKY PRINCE worked his way up on the outside and closed strongly in the closing stages. LADY FLINDERS, shuffled back after reaching the back stretch, swung to the outside and closed willingly when clear. PETEE BLUE fell back badly before leaving the back stretch, then finished with a belated effort. BEHEMOTH closed a good gap to reach contention, but hung from her early efforts. JIM JOHN weakened early. CURRANTS stopped badly.

TULEYRIES WAND, hurried into a forward position going to the first turn, raced SUN DROPS into defeat and, holding on stoutly, outstayed HOT GRIDDLE. Latter improved his position steadily in the last furlong but ran out gamely during the final drive. BUNTINO, very slow to get into racing stride, was forced to better his position on the outside, then closed full of run. MISS ALPHONSO was taken to the outside after reaching the back stretch and made up ground steadily. SUN DROPS was rushed from the beginning and had nothing left when challenged. MARY'S MAY went evenly. CALGARY KAY stopped, as did BELLE FILLE.

Yellow Jackets Smashed by G. W. High

Fredericksburg Bows to Strong Alexandrians by 38 to 6.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., Nov. 22.—George Washington High, Alexandria, presented a powerful and smoothly working grid-iron machine here this afternoon to defeat Fredericksburg High School's Yellow Jackets, 38 to 6, in a home-coming day celebration. The win gave George Washington the mythical northern Virginia high school championship.

Fredericksburg fought steadily throughout the contest, registering 14 first downs to Alexandria's 7, but was unable to advance in the Presidents' territory. The lone touchdown came late in the second quarter when they worked the ball from Alexandria's 39 down to the 15, from where Paully Ventura took it over on an end run.

Alexandria had counted twice when Fredericksburg scored. Early in the second period, after Worden had raced 35 yards into enemy territory, Fones passed to Shu for the touchdown. A few minutes later the visitors worked their way down the field again and Fones dashed 12 yards to within the goal line shadows and Worden took it over for the touchdown.

66-Yard Run.

The powerful Alexandria eleven opened the third quarter with a score when Shu swept through the Jacket line to race 66 yards to the Fredericksburg goal line. It was Shu who counted for the fourth Alexandria touchdown, taking the ball through the center of the Yellow Jacket line for 23 yards to go over, Kirchner drop-kicked for the extra point.

Alexandria was penalized 30 yards in two plays before Fones passed successfully to Shu, who dashed off 30 yards for the fifth touchdown. Burrell had intercepted a Fredericksburg pass to give them the ball.

Near the end of the game Fones passed to Worden, who climaxed the game with a 60-yard run for the final Alexandria touchdown. Kirchner's kick found the goal post. Shu and Fones were the best high school backs seen here in several years.

Gallico

Picks Dartmouth, Harvard, Trojans To Score Upsets.

By Paul Gallico.

BOSTON, Nov. 22.—I am so far behind in my average for the season that my only hope is blind stabbing. The blind stab is often the most effective way of picking football winners, when combined, as I like to combine it, with words of wisdom and advice from Topsy, my little Ethiopian control. As we go through the list, I will try to indicate which of the selections are on the advice of Topsy and which are some of my blind stabs. Topsy was materialized last night at my weekly seance, and is a charming little creature, aged apparently 16.

She seems to be the widow of an Ethiopian chieftain who went away to fight against the Italians, and, being a sensitive soul and prey to a vivid imagination (the chieftain), in order to spare himself unnecessary worry over Topsy's virtue in his absence, he cut her throat a little. Topsy bears him no ill will since it gave her the opportunity for expansion and travel, of which she seems to be very fond.

It was Topsy, for instance, who foresees Harvard defeating Yale by the score of 6-0. Personally, I am inclined to think that Yale will win, but Topsy ssemed so certain that I will accept her selection. As she put it—"Honey chile, don' you go placin' no trust in them comparative scores. When them boys from Harvard and Yale gets to play one another they jes natcherly tightens up like they was rubbed all over wif alum. Who does you like down at Princeton?"

Well, I had to tell Topsy that I liked the upset—Dartmouth 14, Princeton 13. It doesn't really make much sense, and Topsy didn' think so, either, but if there is an upset down there I want to be on it. I like the kind of a team they tell me Dartmouth has, too—not too heavy: fast, compact; no individual stars, and a magnificent spirit.

TOO, Dartmouth has been coming along, improving in each game. It seems to me to have the psychological advantage if there is one. The Princetons seem too high strung and get the jitters.

Topsy picked Michigan over Ohio State by 10-7, and by the blind stab method, I arrived at Southern California 14, Notre Dame 7, which is really indefensible. But you know, all one needs, apparently, to beat Notre Dame is a good pass defense in those last minutes of play. Notre Dame today has probably the most remarkable and inspired football team in the entire country, but it isn't a good football team. A good line will stop them, and an alert pass defense will keep them stopped. But everyone except myself knows that Notre Dame should beat Southern California in stride, but no one knows exactly what Notre Dame's stride is except that they are hell on wheels with two minutes left to play.

Topsy seems to think that Ohio State's playing has been too spotty fo rthe great team that it seems to be and that they are ripe for another stunning upset. But then Topsy also thinks that the Eehiopians are ging to lick the Italians.

Early Score Nets Margin Of Victory

By George Considine.

WASHINGTON AND LEE HIGH, the little Ballston school with the big football wallop, kept her record clean against Washington high schools yesterday at Western Stadium as Coach Johnny Baker's Little Generals mastered Western by the squeamish but nonetheless decisive score of 7 to 6 before more than 1,500 shivering shouters. Not one W. and L. substitution was made throughout the contest.

Evidently planning to pile up a mess of touchdowns early in the game and then content themselves to point for their all-important forthcoming battle with George Washington High, of Alexandria, the Virginians took Western's opening kick-off and went right to work.

The march started on W. and L.'s 35, and encouraged by the stellar line plunging and end skirting of Jimmy Fixx and Hip Hippler, advanced to Western's 4-yard stripe, from which Hip tore through guard for the touchdown. Though he didn't know it at the time, Eddie O'Brien then kicked the winning point.

Unexpected Drive.

With Johnny Hatch leading the way, Western retaliated with unexpected fury, moving the leather from her own 35 all the way down to W. and L.'s 3-yard line, only to lose the ball on downs. Jimmy Fixx punted the visitors out of danger.

For the remainder of the first half the Little Generals took command. But the Western defense was simply impenetrable in its four goal-line stands. Just before the close of the second period, Washington and Lee had the ball on Western's 2-yard line, but couldn't quite tally.

Western's only score came early in the third quarter after Hatch and Morri. Snead, starting in midfield, had combined their passing and driving talents to place the ball on the Ballstonites' 1, and Fullback Brud Saum had piled through center for the tally. Snead's placekick was short and that's the story.

Merritt Reported Married to Singer

It was reported here yesterday by friends of the couple that Jockey Bobby Merritt, under contract to Capt. P. M. Walker—Virginia horseman who trains for the Howe Stable and others—and Babs Ryan, radio singer, were married in the Little Church Around the Corner, New York, on Saturday, October 12, the day of the Futurity Stakes at Belmont Park.

A curious angle to the story is that on October 12 Merritt could have ridden Marshall Field's Tintagel, winner of the Futurity Stakes, but had to give up the opportunity in order to go to New England, where he was to ride Only One in the Agwam Handicap. It so happened that this horse suffered a minor mishap, which kept him out of the race.

Merritt, according to the report, took advantage of his idleness to make the trip with Miss Ryan to the famous New York church.

Hoppe Will Exhibit His Cue Skill Here

WILLIE HOPPE.

The skill that enabled Willie Hoppe to become the outstanding figure in the billiard world will be on display before Washington enthusiasts on Monday, when he will give an exhibition of his repertoire of shots at Woodward & Lothrop's.

Hoppe will stage his exhibition of shot-making on the new home type of table in the store's adult game department for two and one-half hours commencing at 12:30 p. m., during which he will instruct students of the game and answer the queries of fans.

Known as the "boy wonder," when he won the national balk-line title in his early youth, Hoppe began playing billiards at the age of eight, when he required the aid of a soap box to reach the table. Ten years later he won his first world title at Paris. Now 48, Hoppe last week was runner-up to Welker Cochrane in the United States 3-cushion tournament.

Mexico City Eleven Loses on Way Here

Special Dispatch to The Post.

San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 22.—Almost wholly on the defensive, the Mexico City Technical High School football team en route to Washington to play Central High School there lost to San Antonio Technical High School, 13-0, today. The defeat might have been greater had not a first period San Antonio touchdown been nullified because a player was offside.

The contest was largely a passing game on both sides, Mexico taking frantically to the air when a third period goalward gesture carried them to the San Antonio 14-yard line. However, the visitors lost the ball on downs and never threatened again.

Although generally outplayed the Mexicans presented the day's feature with a spectacular running kick by Fullback Romo. That player went over to the left side of the line, faded and then punted on the run, catching San Antonio's defense off balance. Quarterback Floresand and Left Tackle Navarro, also starred for the visitors, coached by Robert Martin.

Landon Prep Humbles Friends Eleven, 32-6

After spotting their opponents a touchdown, the Landon Prep gridders ran roughshod over Friends School yesterday on the latter's field to win, 31 to 6. Friends' lone tally came in the first two minutes of the game, when Russell and Cobey alternated in blasting through from Lanon's 3-yard line from where Russell took it over.

Outstanding in Landon's triumph was Johnny Crocker, who, besides scoring a brace of touchdowns and one extra point, was the sparkplug in the attack.

58,000 to See Dartmouth, Princeton

Special Stands Erected; Tigers Are Favored by Tradition.

By the Associated Press.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 22.—While the Princeton and Dartmouth football teams, which meet in Palmer Stadium tomorrow, completed their preparations with light workouts today, ticket scalpers went to work in earnest along Nassau street as the vanguard of an anticipated record-making crowd of 58,000 checked in.

The demonstration along the main Rialto through the ivy-covered buildings was something unequaled in the last ten years. It wasn't so much that speculators are burdened with pasteboards as it was they were being deluged by students and visitors. To accommodate the large gathering special stands have been erected at the open south end of the stadium and extra seats will be placed along side boundaries of the field.

While all signs point to a field day for the fans, the outlook isn't so promising for the Dartmouth Indians, although some experts feel that when two undefeated and untied teams of major caliber clash on the gridiron anything can and probably will happen.

Local Pros to Play 2 Games in 2 Days

Something of an acid test in endurance will be accorded the Washing Pros this week-end, for that band of hardy gridders is slated to play two games of football within 24 hours. In a charity game at the University of Virginia Stadium in Charlottesville this afternoon the Pros are to take on the Richmond Arrows, while the undefeated Maryland A. C.'s claim to the District title will be disputed at Griffith Stadium tomorrow at 2:30 p. m.

Having fought the Arrows to a scoreless tie early in the season, the Pros were invited to participate in today's game by a special committee that voted them the "greatest eleven to invade Richmond this year." Although the locals anticipate high-calibered competition from the Arrows, they are centering their attention on tomorrow's title game. It will be their first appearance in the Nation's Capital this season.

Davidson, of D.C., Bows at Pinehurst

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Pinehurst, N. C., Nov. 22.—R. P. Davidson, of the Chevy Chase Club, Washington, was defeated here today by F H. Gouverneur, of Rochester, N. Y., 1 up, in the final of the twentieth annual Carolina golf tournament, but the Washington golfer was, in a way, the hero. From 6 down with 7 to play he had the match 1 down going to the seventeenth, and this comeback was achieved through a dazzling display. The spurt started with a birdie 3 at the twelfth, inches from the cup in 2. A birdie 3 followed at the thirteenth, this time a 20-foot putt. The fourteenth Davidson won in par 4 and the fifteenth in par 3.

Mrs. Paine Heads Golf Body at Congressional

Mrs. Ralph Paine was elected president of the Ladies Golf Association of the Congressional Country Club yesterday. A generous supply of holiday edibles was doled out to prize winners as part of the festivities connected with the annual meeting and Thanksgiving Day tournament.

Mrs. H. Weber won a live turkey for her score of 84, best low net card. Mrs. D. L. Morman and Mrs. C. O. McCarthy were tied for the blind bogey award, but on the draw the former won and was awarded a small turkey. Mrs. Weber's was a big one. Mrs. McCarthy won a chicken and a basket of eggs on another event. Mrs. J. L. Rhye won a large duck for finishing first in the selected holes contest; Mrs. R. E. Burks was given a pumpkin pie for winning low-putt honors. A large pumpkin was Mrs. Charles Peas' punishment for rolling up the most putts.

Other officers elected were Mrs. H. Moffett, first vice president; Mrs. A. Hyler, second vice president; Mrs. William Bush, secretary; Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, captain of the first team, and Mrs. Charles Penn, captain of the second team.

Redd Sees Money Key to Good Team

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 22.—Henry B. ("Puss") Redd, head coach at Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, told local alumni in their annual meeting at the Roanoke Country Club last night that "if you want a football team which will compete successfully with the best teams of the North and South there is only way to get it—and that's to buy it."

Discussing subsidization of athletes, he said he saw no wrong in "providing those who helped are clean and deserving."

Redd said there is "one school in the South, in Atlanta, that does not subsidize football players, and they don't play intercollegiate football."

Petersburg Trims Central High, 13-0

By the Associated Press.

Petersburg, Va., Nov. 22.—Outclassing Central High of Washington, in every department, Petersburg High School gained a 13-to-0 victory on Cameron Field here today.

Petersburg gained ground almost at will but the heavier Washington eleven stiffened on several occasion in the shadow of its own goal. Two touchdown threats were balked by fumbling on the goal line.

Play was in Central's territory most of the time.

The visitors were able to register only one first down while Petersburg, sticking to straight football, rolled up 17. The visitors gained but 37 yards by rushing to 228 for Petersburg.

Gun Club Will Stage Turkey Shoot Today

Calvary Takes Two.

The Calvary M. E. basketball team blasted off the lid of its 1935-1936 season last night by winning a double-header in its home gym. To begin the evening's activity the W. R. Dixie Pin Event Today Draws 60 Stars

Arnold, of Annapolis, Will Defend His Crown; $1,200 in Prizes.

THE fifth annual Dixie Sweepstakes, sponsored by the Times, sanctioned by the National Duckpin Bowling Congress and featuring every duckpin bowler on the Atlantic Coast, holds the spotlight today at the Convention Hall alleys, where the first of three 5-game sets will be rolled at 11 a. m.

Since the inauguration of the event in 1931, when the event was just an attraction for bowlers in the vicinity of Washington, interest has heightened to such an extent that the classic has taken on a national aspect with the winner receiving a great deal of consideration by the National Congress when the final ratings are handed out.

It is expected that close to 60 of the Nation's best will toe the line today. Competing maple shooters will hail from as far north as Bridgeport, Conn., and to Alanta.

Blue Ribbons to Vie.

Possibly the most serious challenge for the Dixie title and the nemesis of the Capital's top-notch aggregations are Frank Barber's Connecticut Blue Ribbons, headed by Nick Tronsky, No. 1 bowler of the country. Tronsky will be flanked by such Nutmeg aces as Jack White, Bill Tato, Mike Bogino, Carl Frisk and Joe Gacek, stars whose ability has been proved here. The Connecticut Yankees, another Nutmeg group, also afford a tough hurdle for the local stars. About 12 men representing the Recreation Five and Plaza All-Stars, two of Baltimore's strongest aggregations, are entered and any of them is capable of taking away the crown.

Two bowlers from Philadelphia have surprised the local sponsors, being the first Quaker entry ever to roll in a Capital sweepstakes. Entrants from the South include stars from Richmond and Atlanta.

Bill Arnold, of Annapolis, is the defending champion, and will be out to turn back all challengers for the crown.

Hyattsville bowling stars last night divided honors with the Connecticut Blue Ribbons in singles and doubles matches on the Hyattsville aleys. Each team won one of the two doubles events and split even in the two singles matches.

Denny Hughes, Fight Referee, Married Oct. 17, He Reveals

WEDDING bells rang very quietly for Denny Hughes, well-known local sportsman, last October 17. The bells pealed so quietly, in fact, that it did not become known until last night that the former football star and present fight referee had been married to Miss Jacqueline Cline, of Chicago.

Denny met Miss Cline in Washington about a year and a half ago. She returned to Chicago. Denny went to Oklahoma. On his way back to Washington he stopped off in Chicago and the two came on to Washington for the nuptials.

The ceremony was performed by a minister in Southwest Washington before Mr. and Mrs. Jack Sullivan. Jack himself once was a great football player and Mrs. Sullivan is a sister of Paul Tangora, the local lad who made good at Northwestern in the Notre Dame game.

Hughes attended four colleges during his scholastic career, played basketball and football at each of them, and was captain of the football team at each of them. In rapid succession, he matriculated at Bethany, Berea, Franklin and George Washington.

The bridegroom was graduated from George Washington in 1925, then played professional football with Pottsville in the National League for two seasons. In his first season with Pottsville the team won the professional championship of the world in Chicago.

Upon leaving the football game, Hughes started to practice law, which vocation he still follows. He is a licensed referee in the District.

Van Sweringen Aided by Ayres In Mo.-Pac. Plan

Trustees Charge $4,000,000 Purchase Was Made Without Authority.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Nov. 22.—Col. Leonard P. Ayres, Cleveland economist and director of the Missouri-Pacific Railroad Co., testified today that he collaborated with O. P. Van Sweringen, in formulating the stock purchase plan for improving the capital structure of the railroad in 1930.

Col. Ayres was the third director of the railroad to testify today before Special Master Marion C. Early, who is conducting an examination here at the order of U. S. Circuit Judge Charles B. Faris, of St. Louis.

Bankruptcy proceedings to effect a reorganization of the railroad are pending in the St. Louis court.

Col. Ayres said the plan to buy stock of the railroad in an attempt to build up its capital structure by increasing surplus was the "combined idea" of Van Sweringen and himself.

Holds Van Sweringen Liable.

Fred L. Williams, special counsel for the trustees of the railroad, has alleged that Van Sweringen, as chairman of the Mo.-P. board, acted without authority in purchasing approximately $4,000,000 in stocks, and bonds in his plan to "right" the company's capital structure and is personally liable for the losses suffered.

Col. Ayres said the idea of the plan was to cancel the company stock bought through a wholly owned subsidiary, the Missouri-Pacific Transportation Co., thus creating additional surplus for the company of approximately $6,000,000.

Col. Ayres corroborated the testimony of Directors G. A. Tomlinson and Alva Bradley, who testified earlier, that the executive committee of the road was acquainted with the purchase plan.

Col. Ayres said he was not advised that the books of the company reflected cash on hand during the purchases in such a way that the purchases were not shown.

William Wyer, treasurer of the railroad, and assistant treasurer of the transportation company, testified that the books did not reflect the purchases at the time of the program.

Bituminous Output.

The National Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended November 16 as approximately 7,550,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1934, 7,349,000 tons; 1933, 7,814,000 tons.

British Trusts Turn To American Market

New York, Nov. 22.—English and Scottish investment trusts are regarding the American investment market in a favorable light for the first time in ten years, according to Arthur Wiesenberger, of Distributors Group, Inc., who is at present visiting the leading trust companies in Great Britain.

"These organizations," says Mr. Wisenberger, "have acquired a reputation for appraising United States investments more accurately than any other financial group in Europe and perhaps even in America. For example, they liquidated the greater part of their American holdings prior to the 1929 collapse.

"The British trusts are now giving consideration to the American market in terms of industrial groups rather than in terms of the entire market. This attitude is caused by the peculiar conditions confronting certain groups, such as railroad and public utility shares."

The largest policy in this country is carried by Pierre S. du Pont, of Wilmington, Del., whose life is insured for $7,000,000. Next to him is John C. Martin, of Philadelphia, with $6,540,000. Marshall Field 3d, of Chicago, carries $5,500,000, and Frederick B. Patterson, of Dayton, Ohio, $5,480,500. Walter P. Chrysler is insured for $5,000,000, and three Fisher brothers for $2,000,000 each.

Large Film Policies.

Life insurance as a form of investment apparently is in strong favor with the motion picture industry. Joseph M. Schenck carries $5,250,000, Jesse L. Lasky, $5,000,000, and the three Warner brothers, Albert, Jack and Harry, $2,00,000 each. Among the film stars, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, Al Jolson, Harold Lloyd and Constance and Norma Talmadge have life policies for $1,000,000 each. John Barrymore carries $2,000,000. The sole representative listed for aviation is Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, whose life is insured for $1,000,000.

October sales of ordinary life insurance in the United States were 1 per cent greater than sales in October, 1934, according to reports of companies having in force over 90 per cent of the ordinary life insurance in the United States.

Stocks Drop Sharply Under Wave of Last-Hour Selling; Wheat Declines After Rise.

New York, Nov. 22.—After showing signs of promise in one or two backward groups in the early trading, notably the rails, the stock market floundered for a while and finally was washed lower by a heavy selling wave in the late afternoon. Leading issues, and especially those which have rushed up rapidly, dropped from 1 to 5 points toward the close, and a badly swamped ticker system added to the confusion of public watchers of the market. Turnover was around 4,000,000 shares. December wheat fell ⅝ of a cent to 99 cents a bushel.

Profit taking was the keynote in the markets from the start. For the first two or three hours the decline in prices was too slow to encourage the short sellers, but at least the public was troubled by a late ticker nearly all day. By late afternoon some selling orders were uncovered and bears came to the attack with renewed vigor. Prices were definitely lower and on the run in the last hour, and it was difficult for any one at any time to tell what the real market was, with the ticker ten minutes or more behind the floor transactions and the quotation system unreliable in the crisis.

Telephone Resistant.

Selling reached into nearly every group, but some of the stolid investment issues, as, for instance, Telephone, held out well. Early trading saw another advance in railroad shares, and the last hour, in spite of the disturbance in the market, brought a buying flurry in low-priced oil shares. Gains ranged from 10 to 100 per cent, including Louisiana Oil common and preferred, Pierce, Panhandle and Houston. The Sun's compilation of railroad averages went into new high ground for the year in the morning dealings, with gains of a fraction to 2 points. Motor and accessory stocks weakened. Metals also were lower. Packing shares strengthened and amusements and rubbers were firm.

While profits were being taken in the stock market, in spite of the engagement of large amounts of gold for this country and other evidence of a further flight of capital here from Europe, the French currency continued weak, although it was a little better than yesterday. Last week, the Federal Reserve Bank reports, our monetary gold stock increased $57,000,000 and this week's addition may be even larger. Shortly we will hold a round ten billions of gold, capable of supporting the wildest credit inflation ever seen.

Foreign Funds in Market.

Not only that, and granted that much of the foreign money now coming this way is going directly in the securities market, the funds are flighty. We could lose the money, if not the gold, with a consequent damage to our security markets, once affairs improved in Europe. Moreover, a good deal of whistling in the dark seems to be taking place with regard to the ability of the authorities to check inflation, once it gets to going at full speed. Some experts think the means are there; others are not so certain of that, but are much more sure that inflation may not be recognized by the authorities when it does come; still others doubt greatly the desire or ability of the Reserve Board, dictated to by the Administration, to stop inflation.

On many counts the situation is not altogether favorable. Settlement of the Italian war ought to do our markets more good than harm. Granted the return abroad of some capital that has come here, the offset is greater domestic confidence, once the war threat is removed; and on its merits the recovery in this country looks as promising as that of other countries. After that is said, looms the menace of devaluation of the gold standard currencies, with a possibility of currency chaos for a while in Europe and the present danger of another economic collapse to occur before the Italian venture can be stopped.

Government Finance.

Much depends upon the mood of the moment. While some observers are inclined to agree with Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, of Harvard, that several more billions could be added to the Government debt without hurting its credit, that credit inflation is not an active danger, and that even when it becomes one it can readily be controlled, others are a bit more critical. Perhaps they remember the extraordinary emphasis placed by Prof. Sprague on the early chaos that was bound to follow the Government's fiscal policy in 1933, when he resigned in the autumn of that year. At that time he foresaw grave difficulty in Treasury borrowing of even one more billion. Perhaps the two intervening years have mellowed the outlook for Prof. Sprague and smoothed over whatever differences of opinion that may have arisen in November, 1933, over Treasury affairs.

Brokerage Capital.

The problems of maintaining adequate capital of Stock Exchange partnerships to support active trading by customers in a rising market may be visualized best by example. The minimum capital required is 10 per cent of customers' debit balances. In a rising market the debits of customers naturally increase and the firm's capital must be expanded proportionately. This is difficult if the partnership shares subject the members of the firm to high taxes.

Partners' Taxes.

For example, a partner might be entitled to 51 per cent of profits and liable similarly for losses. If the firm is earning $80,000 a month his share of the profits at the end of the year is $489,600. His income tax is $265,084 for the Federal Government and $39,980 for New York State, a total of $305,064, leaving only $184,536, or 37.7 per cent available for reinvestment in the firm. At the tax rates applicable for 1936 his balance would be only $144,060, or 29.5 per cent. If the firm were doing business as a corporation he could hold 51 per cent of the stock. The profits of $960,000 for a year would be subject to the corporate tax rate of 13¾ per cent (next year 12 to 15 per cent) and the balance, unless paid as dividends to the stockholders, would remain in surplus to protect the firm's accounts.

Total of 628,330 Cars Is 7.4 Per Cent More Than 1934 Period.

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended November 16 totaled 628,330 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was an increase of 43,296 cars, or 7.4 per cent above the corresponding week in 1934, and an increase of 25,622 cars, or 4.3 per cent above the same week in 1933.

Loading of revenue freight for the week of November 16 was a decrease of 25,195 cars, or 3.9 per cent below the preceding week this year, due to the unusual seasonal decline in business.

Miscellaneous freight loading totaled 255,029 cars, a decrease of 9,716 cars below the preceding week but an increase of 35,816 cars above the corresponding week in 1934 and 46,200 cars above the same week in 1933.

Loading of merchandise less than carload lot freight totaled 159,172 cars, a decrease of 5,339 cars below the preceding week, but 2,220 cars above the corresponding week in 1934. It was, however, a decrease of 6,373 cars below the same week in 1933.

Coal loading amounted to 122,409 cars, a decrease of 2,124 cars below the preceding week, 3,995 cars below the corresponding week in 1934, and 14,494 cars below the same week in 1933.

Grain Shipments Lower.

Grain and grain products loading totaled 29,133 cars, a decrease of 1,459 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 1,096 cars above the corresponding week in 1934. It was, however, a decrease of 3,446 cars below the same week in 1933. In the Western districts alone, grain and grain products loading for the week ended November 16 totaled 18,885 cars, an increase of 1,330 cars above the same week in 1934.

Livestock loading amounted to 17,138 cars, a decrease of 1,792 cars below the preceding week, 6,124 cars below the same week in 1934 and 5,127 cars below the same week in 1933. In the Western district alone, loading of livestock for the week ended November 16, totaled 13,495 cars, a decrease of 4,280 cars below the same week in 1934.

Forest products loading totaled 26,049 cars a decrease of 1,653 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 4,352 cars above the same week in 1934 and 1,821 cars above the same week in 1933.

Ore loading amounted to 12,280 cars, a decrease of 3,517 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 8,228 cars above the corresponding week in 1934 and 7,353 cars above the corresponding week in 1933.

Coke loading amounted to 7,120 cars, an increase of 405 cars above the preceding week, and 1,703 cars above the same week in 1934, but a decrease of 312 cars below the same week in 1933.

All districts reported increases for the week of November 16 in the number of cars loaded with revenue freight compared with the corresponding week last year. All districts also reported increases compared with the corresponding week in 1933 with the exception of the Central Western which showed a decrease under two years ago.

Curb Prices Fall In Selling Wave

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 22.—Heavy liquidation unsettled the Curb Market in the late afternoon today, resulting in net losses of fractions to around 3 points. Selling was general with some of the recent specialty favorites under particular pressure. Transfers approximated 687,000 shares compared with 521,000 yesterday.

Aluminum Co. of America lost 3½ points at 89, while Pittsburgh Plate Glass yielded 3 at 96, as did Parker Rust Proof at 76. Other losers of around a point or more included Sunshine Mining at 19½, American Gas & Electric at 38¼, Creole Petroleum at 21¾, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams at 35½, Great Atlantic & Pacific at 132 and Hiram Walker at 31½.

$45,000,000 Issue Filed By Southwestern Bell

Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., of St. Louis, Mo., has filled a registration statement under the Securities Act of 1933 for $45,000,000 first and refunding mortgage 3¼ per cent bonds, Series B, due December 1, 1964.

The prospectus states that the net proceeds of the issue are to be applied solely to the retirement of the company's present outstanding issue of $48,836,600 first and refunding mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, Series A, due February 1, 1954, which the company intends to call for redemption on Feburary 1, 1936, at 105 and accrued interest.

Com. Inv. Trust Lifts Rate and Votes Extra

New York, Nov. 22.—Directors of Commercial Investment Trust Corporation voted today to increase the regular quarterly dividend on the common stock from 70 cents to 75 cents, placing the common stock on an annual basis of $3 per share. At the same time they declared an extra cash dividend of 25 cents per share on the common. Both dividends are payable January 1, to stockholders of record December 5. This is the second increase in C. I. T. common dividends voted this year. The regular quarterly dividend which was paid October 1 last represented an increase from 50 cents to 70 cents per share, and an extra cash dividend of 40 cents per share was paid at the same time. Regular quarterly dividends on the convertible preferred stocks also were declared.

Kreuger Creditors To Get $5,000,000

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 22.—A distribution of $5,000,000 to holders of 5 per cent debentures of International Match Corporation was ordered today by Oscar W. Ehrhorn, referee in bankruptcy, on the motion of the Irving Trust Co., trustee.

Formerly a part of the complex corporate empire controlled by the late Ivar Kreuger, International Match has been in the hands of trustees since 1932.

The dividend authorized today is the first since the company became bankrupt. It amounts to 5 per cent. The present debenture obligation, including accrued interest, totals about $98,000,000.

Stock Rise Justified, Says Dean Langmuir

New York, Nov. 22.—Comparison of the present level of stock prices to that which has prevailed in earlier years indicates that the recent advance is justified in many respects, according to the monthly Economic Bulletin issued by Dean Langmuir, investment counsellors.

"In September, 1930," the Bulletin says, "industrial production reached its half-way point on the way down between the highs of 1929 and the lows of 1932. Yet stock prices in October, 1935, were about 30 per cent below those of September, 1930, even though industrial production at both dates was the same."

Miami Beach Retires Bonds Due in 18 Years

Miami Beach, Fla., Nov. 22.—Municipal bonds with a face value of $471,000 were retired during the past year, although not due for 18 years, City Manager Claude A. Renshaw reveals in his annual report just rendered. In the meantime the city was able to spend more than $200,000 in improvements without increasing the public debt.

The interest saved through calling of the bonds amounted to $491,000, or more than the amount of the bonds themselves, Mr. Renshaw said.

Wheat Prices Slump After Rise Above $1

Profit Taking Carries Market 1¾ Cents Down From Top.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Nov. 22.—Wheat rose buoyantly today to above $1 a bushel, an unprecendented height of late in Chicago, but wholesale realizing of profits ensued, with setbacks following.

Increased strength shown by the Liverpool wheat market, together with an advance of sterling, gave impetus to an early outburst of fresh speculative buying here. At 1.00¼ for Chicago December delivery of wheat, however, concentrated selling developed, tumbling the market down 1¾ cents from that level.

Wheat closed nervous, ⅛ to ¾ under yesterday's finish; December, 98⅞ to 99; corn, ⅜ to ¾ off; December, 59¼ to 60; oats unchanged to ⅜ lower, and provisions 22 to 30 cents down.

Increased rural offerings of corn had a bearish effect on prices of corn and oats. A further weight on the corn market was prospects of continued clear cool weather favorable for conditioning corn.

Heavy Imports From Canada.

Winnipeg, Nov. 22 (AP).—A heavy demand from the United States increased Canada's wheat exports to the United States by 10,000,000 bushels up to November 15 this year as compared to the same period of 1934, official figures showed today.

During those 10½ months, the United States imported 17,240,000 bushels; during the same period of 1934 it imported 7,250,000 bushels. The significance of this market is to be found in comparison with sales to the United Kingdom which up to November 1 totaled 18,000,000 bushels.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Trading considerably less active than on the previous day when fresh unsettlements in French francs caused renewed concern for the entire sold bloc structure.

In New York the British pound sterling was ⅛ cent higher at $4.93⅜. Holland guilders were .15 of a cent higher at 67.52 cents, and the Belgian belga improved .01 of a cent at 16.92 cents. French francs dipped .00¼ of a cent to 6.58⅛ cents, coincident with reports that a new speculative attack had been pressing against the French unit. Swiss francs yielded .04 of a cent to 32.36 cents. In London the dollar was lower at 4.93⅛ to the pound sterling and in Paris the American unit was only slightly changed at the equivalent of 6.583 cents to the franc.

We have in our used or stock 36 Buicks, all traded on the 1936 Buick. All reconditioned according to the high standard demanded by Stanley H. Horner. They represent big values at bargain prices.

TYPICAL VALUES

BUICK 1935 "46s" Coupe. Beautiful deep rich black finish. This is the "sport" model with rumble seat and trunk rack. Actual mileage 2,400 miles. A one-word description of this car is "NEW." It's not even well broken in, but you can save plenty at a full price of $795.

BUICK 1934 "46s" Coupe. This is the sport model with rumble seat. Not a mark on its pale-green finish, perfect chrome, dual horns, practically new tires, spotless interior, mechanically guaranteed. Full price, $695.

BUICK 1933 De Luxe Sedan. Original black finish like new; 6 wire wheels, fender wells, metal wheel covers, all new tires, trunk rack, extra-heavy whipcord upholstery, dual horns, parklight lights. A spotless car with exceptionally low mileage. Unusual value at the price, $645.

BUICK 1932 "57" Sedan. You will think it has new finish, but this car has had so little use that its original black finish shines like new. Equipped with ride control and other extras, this car, driven by one owner, is as clean as any 1934 car in our stock. For a full price of only $445 this is the most outstanding value in our entire stock.

BUICK 1932 "56" Victoria. This is the 5-pass. model with built-in luggage compartment. Perfect black finish, maroon pin stripe, perfect chrome, all new tires, relined brakes, mechanically it gives new-car performance. See this very clean car before you buy, $425.

BUICK 1931 "67" De Luxe Sedan. It's a '31, but if age was based on mileage this car would be listed as a '34. De Luxe equipped, 6 wire wheels, fender wells, trunk rack, spotless black finish, even the upholstery shows hardly any wear. Big value for little money, $385.

Women as 'Bouncers' Best, Asserts Greeter

Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 22 (AP).—Women are better hotel keepers than men—and there are at least two reasons why—Miss Jennie Fisher told a hotel greeters convention today.

1. Women can bounce rowdies when men can't.

2. Women are better homemakers.

"No matter how drunk a man may get," said Miss Fisher, former president of the National Greeters Auxiliary, "he won't fight a woman who is in charge."

Chest Donation Is Doubled by The Roosevelts

President Voices Concern Over Failure of Fund to Attain Goal.

Difficulties of the Community Chest in reaching its $1,877,900 goal yesterday inspired President Roosevelt to double his original gift.

In keeping with Chest custom, the exact amount of the contribution was not announced.

Mr. Roosevelt wrote William J. Flather, jr., Chest treasurer:

"I have noticed with real concern that the Community Chest fund for Washington is still far behind its goal. I am, therefore, glad to send the inclosed check as an added contribution from Mrs. Roosevelt and me."

Another last-minute donation was signed by "Steve, the White House peanut man." The vender gave several dollars, representing a day's receipts.

On The Air Today

WHILE Fred Waring, Rudy Vallee, Paul Whiteman and other prominent air artists are reported to be seeking to restrain radio stations from using their recordings on broadcasts without paying for the privilege—comes word also that Ozzie Nelson is preparing to take up the cudgels for the other side of the question.

Nelson, it seems, is backing up his convictions by sending records to stations for broadcast purposes. He believes that the value of the publicity which the unrestricted playing of his records gives him far exceeds the amount of money that might accrue to him in fees, if each station were licensed to play records.

So—at his own expense—he is forwarding stacks of his recordings to stations over the country to make certain his name and recorded tunes will be plentifully heard whenever there is a recorded program broadcast.

The "Bakers" program maestro contributes one interesting angle on the matter: Through the playing of his records, his name is kept alive in sections not reached directly and regularly by the networks. And through the prestige of his broadcast recordings he is enabled to make an extended tour of one-night stands each summer from which he derives a greater profit than from his radio broadcasts, which involve high expenses.

Vallee, Waring and Whiteman are prominent members of the National Association of Recording Artists, which is understood to be campaigning against, or at least opposed to, stations playing records without paying a royalty to the recording artists.

First hint of Christmas: The ceremonies at the annual lighting of the Community Christmas tree will be broadcast Christmas Eve, at 5 o'clock from Lafayette Square. It is expected that President and Mrs. Roosevelt will attend. The announcement comes from N. B. C. and advises further that the ceremonies will be broadcast to the country at large.

"Showmanship," says Variety, "is a competitive lever with which a radio station, regardless of its size or facilities, fights for audiences. No incisive indication of this lever is found in the standard coverage surveys."

And each year Variety, the "Bible" of many show folks, rates stations for their showmanship accomplishments, "with the corroboration of qualified trade experts." This year, according to spokesmen at WOL, the ratings of the stations affiliated with the intercity network offer proof of the popularity growth of the newest chain.

WOL, it is reported, is rated second in Washington in a field of four stations. In other words, it is rated as the second best station in respect to making itself popular with listeners through "showmanship." All of which is interesting because of the greater size, prestige and potential "push" associated with the three other Washington stations.

The Washington office of N. B. C. now has a director of continuity acceptance. Not bad at all. He will function for both WMAL and WRC. It seems that his task is to edit all continuity for good taste, good grammar, length of announcements, etc. He is George W. Smith (Aside to Mr. Smith: Just try to cut the length of a sales talk for a sponsor!)

The traditional "show must go on" reaches a new something tonight when Pat Binford, master-of-ceremonies of the "Corn Cob Pipe Club" broadcasts from the Binford bedroom four-poster, WRC, at 10:30. WRVA, in Richmond, whence the program has originated for the last eight seasons, has leased a wire to Binford's home, because the Binford knee met with an accident.

A prehearing of the music composed by a German contemporary for Max Reinhardt forthcoming stage production in New York, "The Road of Promise," will be given in a special broadcast from WMAL, at 8:15 tonight. Important parts of the score, composed by Kurt Weill, will be interpreted by Frank Black and the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra. "Road of Promise" opens at the Manhattan Opera House December 22.

'Wild West' Bandit Robs Oklahoma Home

Oklahoma City, Nov. 22 (AP).—Shades of the old West! S. B. Cottingham told police today a mounted burglar calloped up to a window at the rear of his home, stood on the horse's back, climbed in and was ransacking the residence when Cottingham arrived.

Moreover, Cottingham said, the intruder whistled to his steed as he fled and mounted on the run—all in the best aproved Wild West fashion.

Garageman Burned.

Harry Shipley, 34, an employe of the Penn Auto Wreckers, 1349 L street southeast, was burned on the face and hands yesterday when a blow torch he was operating set off the fumes in an empty gas tank of an automobile he was dismantling. He was taken to Casualty Hospital.

Culbertson on Bridge

Courage of Conviction.

"That was a pretty close double, professor. If your partner had chosen any other opening lead, I would have made my contract easily," was the mild criticism of an opponent in a recent game.

"Ah, my friend," I answered, "I knew he would make the best lead!"

And there you have the secret of many a successful partnership. In the particular hand in question, my double was close, and I would not have dreamed of making it with an ordinary player as a partner. On the contrary, I often have refrained from doubling a hand simply because I felt sure that an unimaginative partner would kill one of our tricks on his first lead.

Proper leading calls not only for vision but for courage. Many a player longingly fingers a certain card in his hand, feeling almost sure that it should be led, but because of this or that ancient taboo, cravenly replaces it.

West, on the hand shown below, had no bridge inhibitions. He listened carefully to the bidding, considered his own meager holding, and unerringly selected the one lead to defeat an otherwise impregnable contract.

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♥	Pass	2NT	Pass
3♥	Pass	4♥ (final bid)

West, on lead, felt sure that desperate measures were necessary. His holding in diamonds and clubs was not only woefully weak but their comparative length made it appear unlikely that many tricks could be garnered in either suit. North was marked with some spade strength — possibly it would be king-jack. West therefore opened a small spade, and declarer, not unnaturally, guessed wrong. He played the jack from dummy, East's queen won, and two clubs and another spade were cashed. On any other opening, North's fourth diamond would have afforded a spade discard, making a guess unnecessary.
